SLOAN'S ETCHING OF HIS MOTHER

This is John Sloan's etching, "Mother," which appeared in a recent popular collection of famous American artists. John Sloan's mother was Mrs. James Dixon Sloan, Henrietta, Elizabeth Ireland, who taught school in Lock Haven before her marriage in 1868. She was a Philadelphia girl. The Sloan family moved to Philadelphia when the artist, born in 1871, was five years old. His sister, Marianna Sloan, also an artist, continues to live in Germantown.

The painting with which John Sloan won the Beck gold medal for portraiture at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in 1931 will be one of the six Sloan paintings in the Clinton County Art Exhibit at the Lock Haven State Teachers College the latter half of this week. This picture, "Fargas the Sculptor," is considered a good example of Mr. Sloan's skill in portrait-painting, a field in which he holds high rank as a teacher of younger portraitists.

Mr. and Mrs. Sloan will arrive in Lock Haven Friday, where the artist was born August 2, 1871, for the former's first visit since his family moved away when he was six years old. Few of his family remain, but a first cousin and several second cousins and more distant relatives will be among the fellow-townsmen who will greet the returning native.

Speaking on "Painted Mileposts," Mr. Sloan will give a public address at the Teachers College auditorium at 8:15 o'clock Friday evening, Nov. 15, illustrating his talk with about 100 colored slides of his paintings. He will appear under the joint auspices of the Teachers College and the Clinton County Historical Society.

The art exhibit, opening Wednesday evening at 7:30 o'clock will include six paintings of Mr. Sloan's, samples of his work over a period of 40 years, four of which were exhibited in a retrospective show in the Wanamaker Galleries in Philadelphia and New York last year. Twenty-three of his etchings will also be shown, including the famous "Mother," which is a picture of Mrs. James Dixon Sloan, formerly of Lock Haven, and the almost equally famous "Robert Henri," a picture of the artist who was Mr. Sloan's best friend, and with him, helped to start

CLOSE WHERE WILLKIE LOST, YES, AND WHERE HE WON, TOO

In an apparent effort to show that last Tuesday's election actually was very close, Republicans have been making up charts to prove that IP so-and-so many votes had switched to Wendell L. Willkie, the Republican nominee would have been elected President.

The computations on just how many switches would have been necessary to put Mr. Willkie in the White House vary, depending, apparently, on the completeness of the returns on which the hypothetical figuring was done.
The first such chart published indicated a shift of 493,497 votes in eight states—Illinois, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin—would have given Mr. Willkie 276 electoral votes, 10 more than needed for election.

Plenty of Possibilities
Another chart shows that Mr. Willkie would have won 266 electoral votes, a bare majority, if there had been a shift of 476,803 votes properly scattered through Illinois, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Wisconsin, Missouri, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Delaware.
And, you could get Mr. Willkie 267 electoral votes by shifting 478,652 votes in Illinois, Minnesota, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, Wisconsin, Delaware and Pennsylvania, according to another computation.

Discuss New Car Inspection Rules

provision and enforcement has been in the hands of the Pennsylvania Motor Police. A year ago, there were approximately 8000 Official Stations, and today there are about 8300 actively engaged in this work. A periodic check is made of all Official Stations, and little chance remains for the "chiseler."
With the opening of the new inspection period, November 1, stations will be operating under rules and regulations more rigid than ever and an expert on vehicle inspections, who has traveled over the entire United States, Maurice J. Eldridge, safety engineer, Bear Manufacturing Co., Rock Island, Ill., gave a complete resume of the new regulations and requirements. Mr. Eldridge explained that the man who inspects and permits an automobile to travel

Germany Begins Pulling Finance

Reportedly Fears United States May Freeze Her Assets in Nation

Germany is swiftly pulling up her financial stakes in the United States, well-informed sources have reported.
Very quietly, the Reich began liquidation of her $150,000,000 holdings in this country in recent weeks, shipping the money home through her diplomatic outlets, it was learned. Within the last fortnight this Reichbound stream of wealth has swollen to huge proportions.
Private as well as state funds are being shipped home. It was said that Germany is planning to finance her widely ramified diplomatic and consular services in the United States on a month-to-month basis.
The reason for this money movement is not clear. But it is probably responsible for the hottest speculation in "inside circles" that the United States may freeze German assets in this country in the near future.

While there is no official indication of any such plan of intention on the part of the government, the machinery for freezing assets is established and ready. Immobilization of the Reich's holdings could be accomplished at any time by executive order.
If any such action should be taken, speculators said that it might be on the grounds that German funds were being used for purposes inimical to the interests of this country. The position might be supported by findings of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and Dies Committee investigations.

Or, some believe, the government might go further and freeze the assets of "aggressor" nations, as it already has frozen the assets of nine countries declared victims of aggression—Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Norway, Denmark, Netherlands, Belgium, France and Rumania.
In this case the action could be directed against the axis partners, rather than Germany alone.
Such action would be a hard blow to the axis powers, already squeezed by the British blockade and American embargoes.

Hears History Of Thanksgiving

when the Israelites kept their Feast of the Tabernacles in the fall of the year, a similar feast by the Greeks after their harvest, and other nations in Europe, down to the English who brought it to their new home in America.

Mr. John P. Lyon then read from a Harrisburg newspaper, published in the year 1902, a report of the State Conference held that year in Petrolin Hall, Bellefonte, which mentioned a reception at which the wives of all three Bellefonte Governors—Mrs. Curtin, Mrs. Beaver and Mrs. Hastings—were present, and many other things of interest.
The reports of the State Conference of 1940, held at Lancaster, were then given, the first by Mrs. W. P. Davy, who also read one from Miss Adele Thompson, of Philadelphia, a member of Bellefonte Chapter, on the dedication of Wheatland, the home of President Buchanan, which has been restored, and where the two bookcases given by the Bellefonte Chapter were installed in their original places in the library. In her report, Mrs. James C. Furst spoke of the pageant put on by the Junior Society of Donegal Chapter and Mrs. Mensch told of the reception which followed Mrs. J. V. Foster stressed the national defense program, Mrs. Rowntree spoke of the state banquet, and Mrs. Mensch reported the Pennsylvania Dutch luncheon. At this conference, Mrs. John G. Love of the Bellefonte Chapter was elected State Chaplain by the largest vote cast for any candidate.
Delicious refreshments were then served by the hostesses, who were: Miss Anna A. McCoy, Miss Kate D. Shultz, Mrs. John Van Pelt, and Mrs. Harry Keller.

WILD WIND
Wild wind 'neath a wild sky,
Late on a summer eve,
And it seemed the very heavens to sigh
And the Soul of earth to grieve.
And something within me seemed to say:
"O! weep! Weep! My heart!
For nothing in this world can last
And the best of friends must part."
"O! Wind, Wind! Thou wild, free wind!
Bear me up in thy strength,
Smooth from my brow the grief and care,
And bring me peace at length."
But the mad wind is in a mood,
Nor will heed my troubled prayer,
But huris the words with a mocking laugh
Far and away in the air.
