Poets' Corner

HALLOWEEN. There is nothing so exciting as a Halloween night. With its goblins and witches and ghosts.

We go to a party to have lots of fun. And find a skeleton or dwarf as our host.

The streets are filled with frightening creatures. Like characters out of a book. There's goblins and robbers, and pirates.

In every corner and nook. A piercing yell, a rap on the door. I wonder, who could be there.

A bent old man with a pitiful limp. A hag, with a glassy eyed stare. It makes us acary and frightfully nervous.

As we close our fireside hover, We silently think and say to ourselves, We'll be glad when this day is over.

MY FRIEND There's one thing certain, when I'm down and out. And it looks like there's not a friend about.

There's always one who will stick close by. Without once asking how or why. He's a homely cuss and he lacks an ear.

But that doesn't mean that he doesn't hear. When I speak to him, though I don't say much.

He acts as if he thought it such. As something a king or queen might say. I can't understand it, but he's that way.

When I can't say a single word. He doesn't go by what he's heard; He seems to know just how I feel, And I tell you that is friendship real!

And when things happen that I can't explain. And it looks sorta bad, does he complain.

Oh, say to his friends, "I think he's okay. And I can't be his friend for one?" Ah! no! Instead first thing I know I feel the touch of a soft, cold nose. Against my hand, and I see his eyes. Loyal, trusting, kind, and wise. My throat chokes up as I see him then;

I say it now and again and again. That where on earth can there be found. A friend so faithful as my old hound.

—Virginia C. Irvine.

PORT MATILDA

A very happy meeting was held at the Port Matilda Club House on Wednesday evening, Oct. 30, 1940, when friends and relatives met to help celebrate the fortieth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Harpster. George W. Harpster and Miss Margaret Williams were married at Blandburg forty years ago and have resided in Port Matilda the greater part of their married life.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Harpster are of large families. Mr. Harpster eight and Mrs. Harpster nine brothers and sisters living in Mr. Harpster's immediate family now numbers ninety-six persons and Mrs. Harpster's numbers eighty-two. Both are ideal respecters, kind and sympathetic, respected and loved by everybody.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Harpster as well as their daughter Alice have been faithful workers in the Methodist church for many years. Mr. Harpster says the reason they have lived so happily together all these years, is that he has met a woman who has not only a heart but a brain. He should have that honor for the next forty years. We would suggest to all married men who read this article that they try this out for the next forty years and see how well it works.

During the evening choice refreshments were served, after which the huge wedding cake was cut and everybody enjoyed a piece of the same. Mr. and Mrs. Harpster invited everyone back to help celebrate their next fortieth anniversary—if they have one, which is a little doubtful we fear, but all promised to come if they received an invitation. At 10:00 p. m. everybody wended their way home after wishing the happy couple many more anniversaries. We noted the following present: Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Williams, Rev. Joe Weaver, wife and son Bill, Mr. and Mrs. John Crain, Mr. and Mrs. Boyd Williams, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Spotts, Mr. A. B. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bay, and daughter Pearson, Rev. Rasmiller and Mrs. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Woodring, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Harpster and daughter Jacques, Mr. and Mrs. John Miles, Mr. and Mrs. Marion Bennett and Mr. Yeager all of Port Matilda; Mr. and Mrs. James Letzler and children, Jane and Jerome of Milesburg; Rev.

FARM CALENDAR Timely Reminders from The Pennsylvania State College of Agriculture. Pastures Need Rest—Late. Close grazing of the pasture in the fall means late start pasture in the spring. Agronomists of the Pennsylvania State College recommend giving the pasture a rest in the fall so that it can store up energy for a quick start in the spring and the production of more and better feed during the summer.

Late Pruning is Best—Pruning of fruit trees is done more safely after danger of winter injury is past, say specialists of the Pennsylvania State College. If severe injury has occurred, the damaged parts then can be removed and further cutting omitted. The object of pruning is to help the tree and not just to cut out wood.

Provide Feeding Space—Pullets need adequate equipment to provide plenty of feeding space. Hoppers are needed for mash feeding, and some poultrymen also use grain in hoppers. Poultry specialists of the Pennsylvania State College say that enough space should be provided so that the pullets can eat the feed they need for production of eggs.

Prevent House Fires—Defective flues and chimneys cause most of the house fires at this time of year. Agricultural engineers of the Pennsylvania State College recommend checking the condition of the chimneys for defects and repair or rebuilding, where needed.

Evergreens Need Water—Before the ground freezes, the soil around evergreens should be well supplied with moisture. Evergreens need moisture throughout the year, explain ornamental horticulturists at the Pennsylvania State College.

Mulch Strawberries—Mulch the strawberry plants to protect them from winter damage, fruit specialists at Penn State recommend.

PENN STATE HAS EAST'S LARGEST R. O. T. C. ROSTER In this time of national defense, greater interest than ever before is being shown in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps at the Pennsylvania State College. This unit is the largest in the East, and twice as large as any other college unit in Pennsylvania.

Colonel Ambrose R. Emery, who heads the staff of 16 Army officers stationed at Penn State, said that enthusiasm among the cadets is unusually high this fall. All freshmen and sophomore men are required to take military training during a week, and a picked group of upperclassmen take advanced training.

Because of the record number of qualified juniors who applied for advanced training, the quota this year was raised from 150 to 226 by the War Department. These advanced course cadets receive reserve commissions as second lieutenants upon graduation.

As a land-grant college, Penn State has given military instruction for 75 years, long preceding the establishment of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps in 1902. Out of 2,155 Penn State men who took part in the World War, 48 per cent emerged from the war commission-ed officers.

The basic course students are divided into engineer and infantry regiments, the engineers numbering 1,018 and the infantry 1,512. The regiments have grown to such size that the College Army, created in 1888 to serve a mere 200 cadets, has long since ceased to be adequate.
