M. P.—Military police; members of a special force charged with keeping order, collecting stragglers, directing traffic, etc.

O. D.—Olive drab, the color of the cold-weather uniforms; also, officer of the day, the officer temporarily responsible for the peace and quiet of a camp or garrison.

Old Man—The soldier's way of referring to his commanding officer (but never to his face), whether the C. O. is 30 or 60.

Portee—Carried on vehicles; for instance, "portee cavalry" carries its horses on trucks or trailers until it gets close to the scene of action.

Prime Mover—A heavy truck, used mostly for towing artillery.

Q. M.—Quartermaster; the supply corps.

Reconnaissance—Fancy word the army picked up from the French, to cover the general subject of old-fashioned "scouting."

Retreat—Ceremony attendant to lowering of the national emblem at sundown; "armies don't retreat" nowadays—they "retire" or "withdraw."

Revolver—A pistol carrying cartridges in a cylinder that revolves so that bullets are brought in line with the barrel, one at a time; it definitely is not an "automatic," which the army prefers to the revolver.

Rifle—Generally speaking, any gun with a barrel grooved so as to give the projectile a twist to keep it from tumbling end-over-end; more specifically, a long-barreled firearm fired from the shoulder, or a long-barreled artillery piece as distinguished from a howitzer or a mortar.

Open Top Vehicle Scout Car—A box-like open-top armored automobile equipped with machine guns; used for scouting primarily, and not for a stand-up fight.

Shrapnel—A type of shell set to explode at a designated range, scattering steel balls over a wide area; seldom used nowadays—missiles of this type, presented but unpaid, and to make distribution of the remaining funds to and among those legally entitled thereto under the Testator's last Will and testament, and to make conclusions to this court, will meet for the purpose of his appointment on Friday, the 29th day of December, 1940, at 10:00 o'clock A. M. in the Law Office of the undersigned in the Exchange Building, North Allegheny Street, Bellefonte, Pennsylvania, when and where all persons interested are required to be present and prove their claims, or be forever debarred from coming in on said fund.

Veteran Railroad Dies Charles Patterson, Osceola Mills Railroad engineer, was found dead last Thursday afternoon at his home in the Read House where he had been living. He is believed to have suffered a heart attack. He was 54 years old and had worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad for the past 38 years.
