Bradford, Mrs. Paul Bradford, Mrs. Tom Delaney, Mrs. John Knarr, Mrs. John Martz, Mrs. Mildred Luse, Mrs. George Seerson and Mrs. Fred Slack. OUR VACATION Me and my brother and sister-in-law and my brother and sister-in-law Took a trip to Arkansas. From way out in Illinois you see He drove his car till it pestered me Now I was on vacation bent And didn't care just where I went Were in search for the fountain of youth. All of us had the rheumatiz And we wanted to go where the fountain is. So I took brother and sister-in-law And headed for Hot Springs, Arkansas. Just where to stop we didn't know So we drove up and down Bath House Row. They all looked good in the cooling shade And Lamar Bath is the choice we made. So we hopped up and signed with ink For twenty-one baths and all we could drink. We changed our clothes for a big white sheet. And took our course through the land of heat. First we were soaked in a steaming tub With a great big nigger to give the rub. Then in a sweat room we lay on a cot While drinking water that's boiling hot. Great drops of sweat pop out on your skin It's poison escaping from within. You get a shower and a clean white sheet And if you are able to stand on your feet You walk right into a cooking room Where you sit and talk till nearly noon. It's amusing to see the fat old boys With excess tummies and avoirdupois. The sight of some of them the good Lord knows Is proof that humans should wear clothes. If a nudist camp you'd like to find A few days here you would change your mind. One told me how this water is heated so But rindium down in the earth below. But I turned and said to my sister-in-law That Hell ain't far from Arkansas.

New Schedule For Airmail

(Continued from page one) o'clock, and the afternoon flight at 4:36 o'clock. The present schedule is 9:24 a. m. and 3:36 p. m. Announcement of the new schedules was made at Pittsburgh by All American Aviation, Inc. Similar changes will become effective on the same date on the other four Air Pick-up lines operated by the company. Enumerating the advantages of the new schedules, company officials declared that it would give all points on the Pittsburgh-Williamsport route the advantage of a Stratoliner connection from the West Coast which reaches Pittsburgh at 9:35 a. m., and connections from the Southwest arriving at Pittsburgh at 10 a. m., and connections from New York and New England arriving around the same hour. The new schedules also will provide towns along the route with a mid-day air mail dispatch which will be a distinct improvement over the earlier schedule now in force. Although the idea that the public would use air mail to send a letter only a few miles, or that there would be any advantage in such a service, was once ridiculed, there has been a steady increase in the movement of air mail between intermediate points on the Air Pick-up route. Accounting for the increase is the fact that while these points are an average distance of only 17 miles apart, the public has learned that a letter can be dispatched by air pick-up from one point to another on the morning flight and delivered the same day whereas it usually takes overnight by regular mail, thus effecting a saving of an entire day. It also is possible at most places to send an air mail letter to other points along the route on the morning flight and receive a reply on the afternoon flight if the letter is dispatched special delivery. The later morning schedule will give the public a better opportunity to use this service which is of particular value along this route where there is a strong community of interest among the towns that it covers.

Extension Work Great Farm Aid

(Continued from page one) nomics. The design was to reach the farm, rural home and community with the latest discoveries and most practical methods in their interests. Research work was to be carried on in experimental stations, one of which is located at Pennsylvania State College. The administration was placed in the hands of the land grant colleges. At first, the speaker said, farm folks were not inclined to give a sympathetic hearing, preferring to try to discover the secret of better farming and housekeeping from more successful neighbors, many of whom owed their success however to the findings of these experiment stations, which they had applied to their local conditions. The whole picture is changed in recent years and the help of the extension service is much sought. The type of instruction varies according to the particular needs of each locality and is of an informal type. The Centre county agent, R. C. Blaney, held over 270 meetings in 1940, while the home economics advisor held many more. At these meetings various farm problems are discussed. Demonstrations are held such as the use of the proper fertilizers, methods of canning, and spraying. Visits are made to individual farms and homes. Many calls over the telephone, office calls, and written requests for information and advice are handled. Newspaper articles, pamphlets, and in some counties, the radio are used to disseminate information. 4-H Clubs are organized among the boys and girls. The instruction is based on what gives the people the most concern rather than on any set program. The county agent or home economics advisor sits down with leaders and talks over the problems and develops the program, in cooperation. The Centre County Association was organized in 1917. There are no dues and no formal membership. An annual meeting is held to which all interested are invited. Officers are elected and these officers choose leaders from the various sections of the county and they become the executive committee, charged with the administration of the work. The federal government pays 50 per cent of the expense. The commonwealth 35.7 per cent, and the county 13.14 per cent. No county funds are used for salaries, but only for office and such like expense. Through the Agricultural Extension Service, Mr. Fry said, farmers have been learning to work together and to solve their problems together, and have lifted up the standards and results of their labors through application of scientific research. Some problems, such as that of tubercular cattle, the ravages of the corn borer have found a practical solution through this service. Throughout there has been a broadening concept of agricultural problems and how they may be attacked. Marlin Rumberger, of the DeHaas Electric Company, was received into the membership of the club. Members of the executive committee of the Centre County Agricultural Extension Association present were: Malcolm Muser, Lee Smeltzer, John G. Miller, L. E. Biddle, W. C. Smeiter, Hugh Wilson, Henry J. Stover, Mrs. P. Vonada, F. A. Esterline, A. J. Borrell, W. C. Harter, James J. Markle, C. H. Campbell, Guy W. Stearns, Miss Helen Butler, G. H. McCormick, A. R.
