the injured man. Police started in search of Welker after several persons had named and described him, saying they had seen him working around the store earlier in the day. Officials recognized the name in connection with previous misconduct and if was later brought out that Welker served time in 1938 at Kislyn Farm for robbery and subsequently for misconduct.

Welker's statement disclosed that he had been helping Herr in the store on Monday. Shortly before 3 o'clock when Herr was in the rear of the store and while he was seated on a chair by a table, the youth struck Herr on the head "three or four times. I don't remember how many, exactly," he said. Herr fell to the floor, exclaiming, "Why you dirty son of a b-1" The store manager fought back, grabbing Welker by the leg but subsided after several more blows on the back of his head.

Then the youth removed two wallets from Herr's pockets and $21 to $24 from the cash register. Welker then left the store and threw the rifle barrel over a nearby fence, the statement told. After loitering about the city through the afternoon, Welker said he returned to his residence at the home of his parents-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Baney, which is near Salona. At home, he gave $21 of the money to his wife, telling her he had earned it on a construction job, Welker said. A check for $8.85 was included in the money Welker
