'Letter Blitzkrieg' For Men In Camp

That seems to be about the record—so far. (Hold your hats). But it's by no means the pay-off.

A lieutenant on war games in Tennessee got a jig-saw puzzle letter from his wife which turned out to be a letter which he had been putting it together, to say: "Don't work too hard."

A Fort Lewis, Wash., soldier whose pals put out a gag plea that he was lonely, immediately got no less than 823 letters. . . . And an unidentified girl in Elizabethtown, Tenn., has been bombarding letters—all signed with "Love—Frances"—at half the contingent at Fort Jackson, S. C.

If there's a paper shortage one of these days, we'll have a pretty good idea of what's at the bottom of it.

1400 NEW STUDENTS ARRIVE AT PENN STATE

Freshman week for approximately 1400 new students at the Pennsylvania State College begins on Thursday, September 18, and will continue until classes start September 24.

Originally the College planned to open freshman week last Thursday but postponed the date because of the prevalence of infantile paralysis cases throughout the state.

Campus tours, mass meetings, and fraternity rushing are in store for the new students. The program is planned to acclimate freshmen to college life prior to the official opening.

Nearly every man has a remedy for the troubles of everybody except himself.

THE WAR IN EUROPE

The greatest military campaign in the history of the world has been underway for three months as millions of Russian and German soldiers have fought, bled and died upon the fields of Russia.

It is a war without parallel, with practically no news coming from the 2,000-mile front, except the meager communiques issued by the contending nations. It is virtually impossible to acquire definite information upon which to base logical conclusions as to the results of the fighting.

Both Sides Suffer Losses

There have been enormous losses in men and material, although casualties have not been as high as most estimates. German fighting strength has not yet been seriously impaired by the losses sustained although airplane and pilot losses may be serious. The Russians have sustained heavier casualties but greater reserve man-power cushions the blow. Material losses to the Red army have probably been more serious than human losses.

Russians Still Face Desperate War

The German advance into Russia, it should be noted, while checked, continues. Against Leningrad and in the Ukraine the invaders have made progress and the extent of the gains made by the Russians in their continued counter-attack in the central area should not be overestimated. The threat to Leningrad, Moscow and the industrial areas of the Ukraine remains and until they are removed, it is idle to talk about a Russian triumph.

Reds Retain Industrial Capacity

Despite losses the Russians still have a considerable industrial capacity for resistance. Moreover, both Great Britain and the United States are rushing supplies to the Soviet, recognizing the vital importance of keeping the Red army in the war as an active fighting unit. So far, apparently, Soviet industrial resources have not been crippled and aircraft factories are safe.

While the German campaign against Russia has resulted in heavier casualties for the Russians in both men and material and the occupation of Russian territory has entailed some damage to Soviet resources, the Nazi invaders have utterly failed to destroy Soviet morale. As a result the Germans face alarm for 15 minutes after they left.

The youths admitted in their confessions that when they had left Avis that night, they talked about pulling a "stick-up" but had not decided who was to be the victim.

After passing sentence, the court said, "We hope this will be an example to anyone else with the same idea."

Police had slender clues on which to work, other than partial descriptions which Dr. Waller was able to give. Recently, however, police authorities received a tip that Hill and Aungst were the two men wanted. Hill was picked up September 2 while at his work at the South Avis mills of the Jersey Shore Steel company and was taken to jail for questioning. Aungst was apprehended later and also lodged in jail.

Aungst was released a few days later for apparent lack of evidence. Hill was retained at the jail, however, and last week made a statement incriminating Aungst. The latter was again taken into custody and brought to the jail, where he likewise made a full confession.

Light Fire at Church

A window sill and some frame work was burned in the Church of Christ in Blanchard a few days ago when a blow torch was being used by a painter to remove old paint.

A dry, punky piece of wood suddenly went into a healthy blaze and only prompt application of several pails of water prevented a serious fire. The window frame and sill have to be replaced. The extensive repairs and renovation to this church are well along toward completion.
