A GREETING
It was just two years ago today
That we dined in the same old way.
We feasted on turkey, cranberries
With white sauce.

Everything good from soup to nuts.
Some came early, some came late.
To this, her birthday of 78.
I promised at the age of 80
To come again to see this lady.
Who gracious, and with hair so white,
Served her Lord both day and night.
She makes you feel you'd like to stay.
To sup with her and learn the way.
That she has lived these 80 years.
Helping the sorrowing, drying their tears.
A mother not only to her own.
But to many others she has known.
With deepest faith and loving hand
She helped young mothers understand.
That trust in Him, and courage, too,
Would carry the Promised Miracle
Through.
And when the end of one's life span,
Brought grief, 'twas her sweet, gentle hand
That changed pain to peace, tears
To smiles.
She helped them all these many miles.
Now at this dinner she does preside.
Her children and grandchildren at her side.
Sisters, friends and neighbors near.
Come one and all to bring her cheer
And happy birthday all the year.
—Elva Jordan.

Crime has been blamed, at times, on the star, the newspapers, the movies, and various other things. Why doesn't someone think of blaming it on the criminals?

OLD TIMERS IN BEAUTIFUL BRUSH VALLEY

How dear to recall years of old;
Good old years seem precious as gold.
The childhood years are the dearest,
And in memory, by far the deepest.
The truth does not wear out.
Neither does the good old sauerkraut.
These, we should feel proud to remember,
In the old-fashioned cold month of December.

It is admitted, that the people changed.
Even, in seventy years, and well arranged.
Inventions, reformed habits, even when hair gray
And appeared to make all more gay.

To the old people of today;
The old customs are dear and gay.
But the young people—up-to-date,
Are unable to see their unexpected fate.

If dead trees could old customs reveal,
Of the old-fashioned cider-press' peel.
The old people, the fresh sweet cider,
Was so old-fashioned, refreshing—made abdomen wider.

Many well remember the old bake-oven,
The old ladies knew how to bake.
It was the old important baker,
To bake bread, pies, and rolls—no faker.

In the old bake-oven, some hid,
When some supposed robber got a fit.
Some crept into it to keep warm;
Also to hide from a big bee swarm.

The man in oven to get warm;
To drive the cold out like a storm.
Straw for pillow—set on fire by trickster;
Kicked foot out—jump like a fighter.

To remember the dear old sugar-camp;
How all delighted to it to tramp.
Early in Spring, when snow on ground,
All sugar-tees were to be found.

All trees were tapped in the old-fashioned way:
On warm days, sun shining in Spring's gay.
How the sparkling sap would frolicly run
Into pine troughs—sparkling in the sun.

Every evening sap had to be collected;
Not one tree was to be neglected.
Then sap was poured into large kettles.
If near, fire was started with dry nettles.

Fire was kept up day and night;
Often wild animals would come to sight.
While the boys and girls made love
When they had on warm winter gloves.

When sap started to turn into sugar,
Every one was encouraged to new vigor;
Because, soon all would eat new sugar-wax.
Oh, how delicious to eat, without a tax.

The ladies worked hard to boil apple-butter;
Although, working hard, none made a mutter.
The work however, had to be done
Ere, before the day was fully gone.

The old snitizing-parties were well attended,
By the neighboring ladies—none was offended.
A social gathering, to make needed snitz,
Smoke the pipe and discuss the snitz.

Apple-butter and cottage cheese—the spread,
When spread one-half inch thick on ho-made bread.
How the hungry mouth watered for it,
And seldom knew when stomach said "quit."

What a memory of the old-fashioned funeral;
In attendance, what a high numeral.
Funerals were in forenoon, as was custom;
All remained for big dinner at random.

So called "hostlers" took care of horses,
Everything was done according to courses.
After dinner people visited a while,
Then returned home without a smile.

The boy who had horse and buggy;
Clean shaven and a face real ruddy.
How the girls would at him smile,
As it was considered, worth while.

The girl on his buggy, was it,
No other girl went into a fit.
But patiently waited their chance,
Hoping to have the privilege for alliance.

The old jug which contained—guess what?
Was easily seen in the field—guess that?
What was first cut with a double, dutch,
Which made ache in their bleckle (dutch).

Next grain was cut with a cradle,
When cradling, rone quoted a fable.
To swing a cradle one long day,
Was not fun for a small pay.

Wheat and oats farmer hauled on wagon
To which the grain was loaded—long day's trip
With four horses—wheels seldom would slip.
Wild animals were very plentiful, years ago;
So hunters had not far to go,
To get all meat needed.

In the home—no hunting license required.
Best of all, the old-fashioned revival meetings,
When red-hot sermons, kept souls from freezing.
People would repent, sing and shout,
And drive the old devil out.

People prayed the old-fashioned way,
And kept spiritually alive every day.
On their faces a sweet spiritual smile,
The experience to have, worth while.

Oh, that all had the soul's need;
And always on His grace would feed.
How happy this world would be,
If all from sin would flee.
