Japs Capture Singapore Port

United nations. In its 22 square miles of protected waters, the Japanese fleet may now rest and refuel. Its airfields will soon be humming with Japanese planes, preparing to battle with British and American planes for the conquest of Java and Sumatra.

The gallant fight in Burma to keep the supply line to China open will be made more difficult. The Gulf of Martaban is an easy sail for Japanese transport ships and thousands of Japanese troops will be released from the Singapore fight to join in the Burma campaign.

The east coast of India is now within easy reach of the Japanese. The communication lines between India and Australia are threatened. The west coast of Australia itself is only a 2,000-mile cruise for the Japanese fleet now.

The first effects of Singapore's fall undoubtedly will be felt in Sumatra, the Dutch Indies island only a few miles away which is already under the attack of the air and parachute troops.

A thousand miles long, the southern tip of Sumatra is only a hop away from the rich prize of the Dutch empire—Java.

Not only will troops be released for the fight against Chiang Kai-Shek, but the Japanese fleet is now in a position to attempt a sea blockade against Rangoon, where American and British supplies start their land journey to China's armies. Calcutta on the east coast of India is only a 2,000-mile round-trip cruise.

COLLEGE STUDENTS WILL PERFORM FOR SOLDIERS

Members of the Penn State Theatians, undergraduate musical comedy organization at the Pennsylvania State College, have initiated a plan to send vaudeville units to various Army camps throughout Pennsylvania and the neighboring states.

For the past six weeks the Theatians have been rehearsing two of the mobile units of about 20 performers each. Local benefits have been held to finance the tours. According to James McAdam, of Donora, president of the Theatians, the plan has been received enthusiastically by recreation officers at a number of Army posts.

Dancing choruses, blues singers, quartets, comedians, semi-classical singers, tap dancers, and small dance bands will perform for the entertainment of soldiers. Nearly $200 was received by the entertainers as part of the proceeds from a "Victory Ball" sponsored by Penn State students.

THE METALS IN THE BODY
There are other metals that are taken into the system, beside aluminum. Professor McCollum intends to experiment with all of them in the same way, and find out the various effects that they have upon the body.

Normally, the human system contains sixteen metals. They are obtained in the food in organic form. The body can not maintain itself in health without these elements. For example, if the calcium in the blood falls below a certain level, acidosis results. Rickets are brought about through the disturbance of the calcium and phosphorus content of the body. When you see a pot-bellied, weined child, with crooked legs, just remember that his bone growth has been interfered with through a deficiency diet, and insufficient sunshine.

The body must have iron in the red cells of the blood to carry the oxygen where it is needed. If this element is lacking, the person has anemia which is a serious condition. A form of this trouble known as pernicious anemia has never been cured. Since it was discovered that liver built red blood cases have been much improved, and the life can be greatly prolonged by eating enough of it.

Green leafy vegetables also contain chlorophyll, which is organic plant iron. It helps to build red blood to a large extent, and overcome all forms of anemia.

Among the elements found in the body are chromium, cobalt, tin, nickel, arsenic, manganese, iron, phosphorus, calcium, mercury, and some others. All of these are in the soil in an inorganic form, but the animals cannot appropriate them. The plants accomplish this work for them. Animals can eat the flesh of other animals that get these elements from vegetation, or they can obtain them directly by eating the plants themselves.

Here we see the wonders of the Creator. A beautiful Providence has placed in the earth elemental substances that man and the animals must have to sustain life. But they cannot feed upon them in this form. Now the vegetable kingdom cannot live without them.

In the wonderful laboratory of nature, through the action of rain and sunshine, the trees and plants take what they need to enable them to live, flourish and reproduce. Man and the animals in turn live upon the vegetable kingdom, either directly or indirectly, and so the marvelous cycles of life continue.
