to see if Mr. Glasgow would go along over to the house. They all went over to the house and found he had passed away. Mrs. Benner said he must have died early because his wife was rising for his day's work was 5 o'clock in the morning. Mrs. Benner had been boarding and caring for the little girls each day while Mr. Crust was working in the fields, but this was the only time the little girls had ever come over alone. Mrs. Crust always accompanied the girls.

Mrs. Benner's home every morning. They would go back to the farm and do his day's work and call for the girls when his work was done. Mr. Crust's wife was struck by lightning four years ago and since then Mr. Crust cared and reared his two little girls up to the time of his death. Mr. Crust moved from Madisonburg in April this year on the Prof. Gorman farm here at Rock, where he had been working hard with his farm crops and was also carpentering and repairing the house and buildings. The night of his death he was heard ploughing in the field until 10 o'clock. The community mourns the loss of a good and accommodating neighbor, and one that was well liked by every person that knew him. He lived with the Ira Benner family for 13 years before he married Helen Benner, daughter of William Benner. She knew all the neighbor men were away working, so she thought of Gen. Glasgow, who was visiting at her son, Francis Benner's home. So she started with the two little girls planes that were fighting the far-flung battle of Midway.

Wounded Navy Flier Gives Graphic Story

Carrier Afire One of the larger carriers already burned fiercely, while enemy cruisers and destroyers wheeled around it waiting to rescue personnel.

Gunner Hit In the face of terrific anti-aircraft fire and enemy fighter attack, the American planes leveled for the assault. Gay heard his machine gunner say he had been hit. But the approach continued. Near the great Japanese carrier, Gay launched his projectile, then swung sharply over the target and sped astern as fast as his plane could carry him.

Suddenly an explosive shell from a Zero fighter ripped through his torpedo plane's rudder controls. The detonation seared Gay's left leg. Almost simultaneously, a small caliber bullet struck his upper left arm. Coolly Gay brought his heavy plane into a stall and pancaked into the sea several miles astern of the enemy carrier.

His gunner was dead, and in the emergency landing his radioman was unable to pull free.

Plane Sinks At 11 a. m., Gay alone, watched the tailfins of his plane dip. Now a bit of luck held with him. Out of the sinking wreckage floated the bar containing the deflated rubber life raft—a black cushion on which the bombardier knelt while working.

Gay figured his chances quickly and accurately. There had been no Japanese strafing helples pilots falling by parachute, and of machine-gunning of men in such life rafts as had floated clear of his own plane.

Gay declined to offer himself as such a victim. He ducked under the cushion as enemy fighters swarmed overhead. Now knowing the extent of his wounds, he felt cautiously at his arm. The bullet which apparently had struck him at the spent end of its trajectory, dropped out in his hand.

Five Carriers Hit "For some reason," Gay recalled, "I put it in my mouth. Maybe I wanted a souvenir. Anyhow, I lost it before long."

He bandaged his injured leg under water. Then from his fish-eye view at sea level, Gay saw two other Jap carriers hit squarely by United States bombers.

Tremendous fires burst from these vessels. Great billows of smoke churned upward with the flames flaring from the apex in dark columns.

Internal explosions sent new gushes of smoke and fire belching from the carriers at momentary intervals, he said.

The ferocious Pacific fleet attack ended, the second Kaga class carrier was on fire from bow to stern. Surface craft gave Gay some narrow brushes. One enemy destroyer appeared to be driving straight at him as she sped to aid a stricken carrier. He thought it would run him down, but at the last instant it swirled past.

Enemy Ships Pass A heavy cruiser steamed by less than 500 yards from him. Gay saw her crew lining the rail, their white uniforms gleaming against the battle paint, grimly watching the destruction of their force.

As the afternoon waned, the Japanese made frantic efforts to stem the damage. An enemy cruiser sought to stand alongside a crippled carrier, but seemed unable to approach close enough. Gay observed this vessel's big guns commence to rake the wounded carrier, presumably to scuttle her.

Sometime later a destroyer managed to come along side the still floating carrier to remove survivors. Overhead, Gay said, Japanese planes appeared to be circling in a vain attempt to land on the smashed carrier. They would pass above her, then soar out of sight, and return.

Darkness fell, and he never learned what became of them. In the twilight, "maybe a little earlier than was wise," Gay inflated his life raft from his carbon dioxide bottle.

Working calmly the young pilot had to make emergency patches on several bullet holes in the rubber boat before it would sustain him safely. He clambered in. The long night began.

Far to the north, great glowing patches appeared in the sky. Gay thought these might have been the searchlights of Japanese rescue vessels seeking to pick up carrier personnel.

There didn't seem to be much else to do, so he "tried to catch a few winks of sleep."

Toward morning he was awakened from fitful slumber by three explosions which he believed may have been demolition charges.

Several hours after sun up a navy patrol plane, wings out on a search spotted his rubber boat. Later the plane returned and picked up Gay.

Later a navy doctor asked him what treatment he had for his burns and he replied: "Well, I soaked 'em in salt water for ten hours."

They headed back to the base. The surface of the battle-arena was littered with black Japanese life rafts, presumably used by the enemy when they abandoned ship. Great patches of oil floated on the debris-strewn sea, Gay said.

Gay reported that the one carrier of the Kaga class could be listed as "certain loss" while the other two carriers were "probable." These were later pursued by American forces engaged in finishing off the crippled units of the Japanese fleet.

Gay's wounds are not serious.
