GAS MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM CARS

The Keystone Automobile Club calls attention to a warning printed in the "A" ration books that rationed gasoline "must not be taken out of the fuel tank of the vehicle described on the front cover." Punishment for violation of rationing rules and regulations is a maximum of $10,000 fine or ten years in jail, or both.

"In recent weeks," said a club statement, "we have been hearing many stories about gasoline thefts from parked cars. In some instances it is reported that tanks have been punctured to save thieves the trouble of siphoning the gas through the cap opening. This practice also is resorted to in cases where vehicle owners have attempted to safeguard their fuel supply by purchasing gas tank caps with locking devices. "The rule against removing gas from the tank very likely can be construed to cover thefts, which would make the stealing of gas a perilous enterprise for any thief."
