Borough officers this week pointed out that the lights were not installed solely to preserve the life, limb, and happiness of motorists. They are designed also to protect pedestrians, but their value in that field is nil unless pedestrians obey the signals. When you're walking, you should observe the lights the same as drivers of automobiles. Cross only on the green light. When the red light Spicer is said to have a criminal is against you, wait.

If you ignore the traffic signals and are injured by a car while crossing a street on a red light, it is questionable whether you would have any recourse at law. You are supposed to do your part in preventing accidents. Your part is to cross only on the green light.
