cally, this corner long has wondered why the State Police sub-station at Rockview isn't moved off the prison grounds—and why they don't quit having prison inmates work around and in the sub-station. On one occasion inmates stole a police car and escaped from the institution. On at least two other occasions, prisoners have stolen police guns before escaping. Often there is only one police officer on duty at the sub-station. Trustees could gang up on him with ease, break open the police gun case and help themselves to whatever arms and ammunition they wanted, and could then escape in a police car—at least one of which is always on the premises. It is unfair to prisoners to place such temptation before them, and it is a hundred times more unfair to expect police officers to carry on their work of catching criminals while convicted crooks are looking over their shoulders at all times. Sooner or later someone is going to be killed.

Snake Stories of Old Canal Days

Before we left, the artist said she would visit my namesake Kit Kein Outland, at the hospital in Elizabethtown; that she knew all her friends would be sorry to learn of the former Olympic champion skater's long and dangerous illness, but she is now much better. One of Miss Sue Kline's neighbors, an old veterinarian, standing by, said: "Just now the islands on the Susquehanna are full of snakes. Some say they came down on timber sticks in the floods; others say they come underground, which doesn't make sense. I've seen snakes swimming, just the heads showing. Perhaps they were not all watersnakes, but rattlers and copperheads among them. I wonder if snakes are found on Spicewood island on Kettle creek, settled by my kinfolk; the Proutz, a branch of Simson Cameron's mother's family, of Perry county. . . I think I'll have to drop Mr. Cranmer a line."

PENNSYLVANIA LOSES GRIP ON INDUSTRY

Despite the present war boom and prosperity, Pennsylvania has declined in its hold upon the nation's industry, a 25-year survey by three Pennsylvania State College economists has indicated. A Pennsylvania industrial decline of 21.5 per cent in 20 years and a falling off of 2.3 per cent in relation to the industrial strength of the rest of the United States in 25 years, was reported by Dr. Carl W. Hasek, Dr. George L. Leffler, and Dr. Richard H. Waters, of the department of economics at the College. Since 1914, heavy industries, such as coal, iron, steel, and electric power, have fallen. Pennsylvania's earnings have been bolstered by an increase in light industries, such as cocoa products, cordage and twine, men's clothing, and cigar manufacturing. Dr. Hasek, head of the Bureau of Business Research at Penn State, warned Pennsylvania industrialists to "consider post-war methods of increasing our industries since the far West and southern states are drawing our heavy industries away from us."

Mitsui Industrial Company—780 technical experts on their way southward to organize "new resources" in the Pacific areas seized by Japan.

The story of the final hours before Pearl Harbor is that the war lords of the Japanese army kept from Emperor Hirohito the final urgent appeal which President Roosevelt directed to him that peace might be preserved between the United States and Japan.

According to information, the Japanese army censors delayed the President's appeal for at least 12 hours. The result was that it was impossible for Joseph Clark Grew, the United States Ambassador, to see the Emperor before the war lords had arranged the declaration of war. The outbreak of war surprised Tokyo. Correspondents had been convinced that the Japanese war lords were about to strike. But when the critical situation in November passed, it was generally believed the blow would come several weeks later, not as early as December 7.
