Who is entitled to buy an Electric Range Now?

You can buy an electric range now, if your situation conforms to the government's recently changed regulations. Many dealers have electric ranges in stock for authorized sale.

To purchase a new electric range, a person must certify to the dealer that it is required to replace an electric range that cannot be repaired, or that no other range is available, and that adequate wiring and service facilities are in place.

Thirty-four thousand West Penn customers, not now using electric ranges, have adequate service facilities for range use.

In some instances, even the range circuit is in place ready to have a range plugged in. In other cases, only the range circuit is required and contractors can install these as long as they have the materials.

If you need a new electric range and can meet the require ments, we suggest that you visit your electric range dealer and discuss the details of handling.
