Report On Coal Mine Inspection

Federal coal mine inspectors have recommended better ventilation, safer blasting operations, and the elimination of a number of ignition hazards to increase safety in three small Pennsylvania coal mines—the 200-ton-a-day Nos. 4 and 5 mines of the Cherry Run Coal Mining Company at Snow Shoe, Centre county, and the 70-ton-a-day mine of the J. Granger and Sons Coal Company at Pleasant Hills, Allegheny county.

Several other suggestions to help prevent accidents were listed in two reports prepared by Federal inspectors who visited the hand-loading mines last October and November. Dr. R. S. Sayers, Director of the Bureau of Mines, informed Secretary of the Interior Harold I. Ickes.

Air analyses revealed a trace of methane, an explosive gas, in the Nos. 4 and 5 mine, but none in the Granger mine, the Federal reports stated. However, since the Bureau believes that all coal mines should be regarded as potentially easy, the reports suggested providing additional safeguards against possible liberation of methane.

The inspectors offered detailed plans to circulate more air through the working places of all three mines and recommended that ignition possibilities for a fire of an explosion be reduced by using permissible explosives instead of black powder for blasting.

Church services on Sunday, 10:45 a. m., were held in the home of Fred Betz on Friday evening, March 12. Ladies Aid Society meeting has been postponed for the month of March.

Rev. and Mrs. John R. Gulick and daughter Carol Ann, were Friday evening supper guests at the Swope home.
