500 Pilots To Be Trained Here

(Continued from page one) tinent on the College's ability to furnish a suitable airport for flight instruction, and the tie-in with the Bellefonte airport completed the set-up.

Instructors and mechanics at the airport will obtain their own living quarters, probably in Bellefonte or vicinity.

The Bellefonte airport, recognized as one of the finest and best equipped municipal airports in the central part of the State, was presented to Bellefonte borough by the Government in April, 1939. Since then it has been leased from the borough to Henry Noll, who has been conducting private courses there since that time. The field is provided with boundary lights, hangars, classrooms and shops in which all branches of aviation may be taught. The ground occupied by the airport is held by the borough on lease from the owners.

The flight school comes here as the result of efforts by the Chamber of Commerce, Penn State College, and of a number of local organizations which manifested a belief that the local airport is well suited to a large scale training program during the war emergency.

Penn State will utilize its own faculty for the academic work including mathematics, physics, current history, geography, and English. Physical training and first aid will be given through the facilities of the School of Physical Education and Athletics.

Plans are being made to quarter the cadets in fraternity houses on or near the campus. Fraternities at Penn State have already made plans to pool their resources, and members of houses selected for the cadets will probably move into other fraternities.

Army Air Force officers are expected to be ordered there to take charge of military instruction including infantry drill and indoctrination work which will be offered with the cooperation of the College department of military science and tactics.
