

Why Buying War Bonds Will Help Prevent Dangerous Inflation in U. S.

The War Bond campaign, now underway throughout the United States, seeks primarily to interest individuals, partnerships, and corporations other than commercial banks accepting demand deposits. It is very important for every American to understand the reason for the emphasis placed upon participation by the groups specified.

Primarily, the Government wishes to lessen the danger of inflation. This can be accomplished by holding down the amount of money in circulation. The more money that the people of this country invest in War Bonds, the less they will have to spend on a dwindling supply of civilian goods. The less money available for spending, the less danger of inflation.

A great portion of the $7,000,000,000 which the Government is now spending each month passes into the accounts of individual Americans. If these contractors, war-workers, farmers, soldiers and their families, business executives, merchants and others, subscribe to War Bonds, they lend the money to the Government and it can be used again next month. There is no increase in the amount of money in circulation.

The Government estimates that funds available for investment are increasing at an unprecedented rate. Even after allowing for heavier taxes, it is estimated that current individual savings and corporate accumulations will reach nearly $70,000,000,000 in 1943, as compared with approximately $40,000,000,000 last year.

Unless some of this money is returned to the Treasury through participation in war financing, it will remain in the hands of spenders and constitute an inflationary threat.

The Government could, if it so desired, secure $13,000,000,000 from the banks of the nation. If the Treasury did this, it would pay out the money, which would immediately go into the banks as deposits of individuals and corporations. The total deposits of the banks would be increased and the spending power of the nation would be enhanced.

It is much more desirable that a large percentage of the money paid out by the Government should find its way back into the Treasury. The money which would immediately go into the banks as deposits of individuals and corporations. The total deposits of the banks would be increased and the spending power of the nation would be enhanced.

Probably the greatest task facing this democracy at the present time, so far as the home front is concerned, is to awaken the people to the dangers of inflation. It is a terrible blight, destroying values and producing poverty.

We had it in the United States in 1931 and 1932. Surely, every American who can remember what took place in these years will be on guard against a repetition of the disaster.

It is easy for an individual to be fooled by the possession of dollars. It is hard to understand that what a dollar will buy is more important than the number of dollars available. If every American doubles his income in 1943 and prices are tripled, there will be no gain for the individual, regardless of the possession of an increased number of dollars.

While it is easy to see the results in this illustration, it is much harder to convince individuals and classes that they cannot, with impunity, seek to increase their incomes upon the supposition that prices will stand still.

Just as surely as the sun rises, increases to one class or group will be followed by increases to others, with the net result that everybody will have more dollars to spend. This sounds wonderful, but, in the meantime, prices will go up and the purchasing power of dollars will decline.

In the present crisis, the danger of inflation is so great that it behooves every American to resist all temptation and to realize that the stability of the dollar will alone give value to our money.

The purchase of War Bonds is one way to join the fight against inflation. There are, of course, other reasons why every American should buy War Bonds, but inflation-insurance should be persuasive even if other reasons do not exist.

In many sections of the world American men and women face death in the service of their country. Many have died; others will make the cause of democracy the price of their death. The heroic willingness of so many soldiers and sailors to take their places in the ranks should be an inspiration to those at home.

What are Americans on the home front asked to do? Not to die, not to suffer agony alive but simply to lend the United States, their country, some money at a good rate of interest.

If this reason doesn't convince the reader, let him, or her, glance at the casualty lists that are beginning to come home. Somewhere, as you read this, an American soldier, sailor, and perhaps many of them, are dying for the defense of you, your property and your rights.

What are you going to do for your country, your dead and yourself?

AFTER TEETH LOSE THEIR NERVES—No. 5

It is a very difficult matter to fill a root canal thoroughly and acceptably, for the space is almost microscopic in which to work.

Even if the dentist succeeds in doing this perfectly, there are other factors to be reckoned with. The devitalized tooth is not wholly dead. The outer covering of the root has some blood circulation through it, which is brought by blood vessels situated in the membrane surrounding the root. This blood carries germs and toxins from various parts of the body to the devitalized teeth. Having but little resistance to disease, the roots often become highly infected and in turn, the blood passing through them takes the poisons to various parts of the body.

So this is a give and take process, that is dangerous to health and even to life itself. In other words, the

YOUR HEALTH

The practice of medicine is not wholly concerned with the treatment of disease.

It deals also with the preservation of good health.

Health is not the absence of disease, but a positive sense of well-being.

Psychiatry is not concerned only with the mentally ill.

The chief aim of psychiatry is to point out to the individual a way to the fullest life possible.

The person who is mentally healthy knows how to meet life squarely.

He has formed good habits of thinking, reasoning and concentration.

He possesses self-confidence, self-assurance and is generous.

He has reasonable understanding and control of his emotions.

All in all, the mentally healthy person is able to adjust himself to his environment.

Psychiatrists do not treat dementia praecox, melancholia, psychoneurosis, or bad children.

Rather, they treat persons suffering from dementia praecox, or people who are depressed, people who have neuroses or children who misbehave.

In addition to treatment, there is also definite concern with the prevention of mental illness, and the preservation of good health.

The psychiatrist has devoted many years of study to his particular field.

He is the one who should be called to diagnose mental disease and prescribe treatment.

The family doctor, who is familiar with the family history, is frequently able to prevent many mild mental disorders.

It is common sense to accept mental illness as a disease like any physical ailment.

Mental upset calls for the scientific attitude reinforced by medical experience.

Psychiatry can rectify many mental derangements.

LAWNS FOR GARDENS

Lawns can be converted into Victory Gardens without spading up all the sod, it has been suggested by Ed. W. Mitchell, farmer of Stuyvesant Falls, N. Y., and advisor of the General Electric Farm Forum here.

"Tomato plants can be placed in holes 18 inches square," Mr. Mitchell said. "Make rows straight so the remaining grass can be mowed easily. Space tomatoes about four feet apart. They should do very well that way if given a little extra food and water."

"Use a paper collar around each plant to keep off cut worms, as well as mulch of paper and lawn clippings to keep down weeds and grass," he continued.

Pepper plants can also be grown the same way, but they should be spaced only two feet apart, according to Mr. Mitchell.

For cabbage, beets, carrots, onions and the like, he advises a straight trench 18 inches wide.

PROTECT EVERGREENS NOW

This is the time of year when evergreen trees should be protected against scale insects, says Ed. W. Mitchell, advisor of the General Electric Farm Forum.

"The best and safest control on evergreens for white pine scale, or any other scale or mites," Mr. Mitchell explains, "is a miscible oil, one gallon to 20 of water, or a three per cent oil emulsion similar to that used on apples, applied in early spring when apple buds begin to swell."

The application must be very thorough to be effective, he warns.
