DRAFT HEAD SPEAKS:

A local newspaper last week quoted the head of Local Draft Board No. 1. State College, as saying, in part: 'Selective Service is not responsible for the thousands of young men returned to the campuses of the nation. Why the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and the Aviation authorities send men, some college graduates, from college to college for refresher courses, is not our affair.' He goes on: "The question: Why break up homes by calling fathers while this great pool of manpower, anxious to get into active service, is shifted from one educational center to another, is one your Local Board cannot answer, because it is not responsible." This department, which is a pre-Pearl Harbor father of draft age, can't understand the Draft Board Police kept firing into the air head's position. The way we've always understood it, the lads sent ways of dishing it out to our enemies, and will darned soon be in there getting a taste of real war. Meanwhile we fathers will be undergoing basic training, or will, ourselves, be getting refresher courses in college, getting ready for our turn. Air Corps officials don't know what they're doing.

SOLDIER LEARNS:

A Bellefonte service man home on furlough last week learned a thing or two about war from the home hose so "he could drain some gasoline from one car to put in another machine." The fighting man, of course, busy in camp, had no occasion to learn beforehand that such an act is a serious offense under
