We wonder what Hitler and Hirohito think of Benito.

The war may develop into a contest between the home fronto.

Now is the time to buy War Bonds instead of buying that gadget that you want.

Front-line soldiers may have the war on their minds but our politicians are thinking about November, 1944.

Money spent for war purposes is expended to save us from destruction, and if it achieves that purpose, it has done all we can expect.

By comparison with the people of other countries, Americans still live in luxury

Even increased income taxes have not convinced some Americans that the nation is engaged in a serious war effort.

Our own prediction is that Hitler will not make a speech, celebrating the fourth anniversary of his invasion of Poland.

We certainly can't prevent inflation if the people of the nation insist upon it but, personally, we have had one experience and that's

The good farmers of Centre county, who raise most of their food, will not go hungry next year, regardless of what happens to the nation's food supply. Feeding the family this winter is going to take intelligence, imagination and stick-to-it-iveness. MORALE TOP HEAVY

Allied morale is so high it is bending under its own weight. One columnist remarks that the "war has gone stale politically." War workers are reporting easing up on the job. Heads of war industries say they are badly in need of workers, one plant president in the east saying they could use 10,000 more employes now. People are beginning to write to newspapers asking when they can expect the boys back home.

Foreign correspondents report the situation is similar in England. One American newspaperman returning from the war fronts to London says he was astounded to find Englishmen making bets the war would be over by Thanksgiving or Christmas.

This excessive optimism is causing concern among the Allied high command. As one American admiral remarked recently, "Americans must show that they can take the good news as well as the oad." And "taking" it means tempering it with common sense and good judgment. We are battering the Axis now. Reports from Europe say 73,000 persons are homeless in Berlin. Hamburg is said to be practically destroyed, as well as many other German cities. Allied reconnaissance flights show that two months after the American raid of June 22 on the second largest Nazi synthetic rubber plant at Huls is still out of operation, and Regensburg's Messerschmitt factory, source of 30 per cent of Germany's fighter planes, will be out of commission at least six months. It was estimated this would deprive the Germans of from 1,500 to 2,000 planes. One American air general says that if these Allied raids are intensified this fall, German economy may collapse by the first of the year. But generally, few high military men are placing their estimates for the end of the war earlier than next spring. And there are some who say it may continue months longer than that. It is dangerous for us to count upon a speedy end of the war in Europe. Of course the end may come quickly. But, then again Germany may fight desperately on . . . it still has millions of fighting men . . .

for an indefinite time. Hitler's appointment of Heinrich Himmler, blood-smeared Gestapo chief, as chief of all internal German affairs, except labor, which comes under Hitler, is an indication the Nazis are tightening their iron grip on the German people in anticipation of internal strife. Yet, such is the organization of the Nazi party that it might, through violence, hold together a beaten nation for a considerable period. Public complacency on the home front could so weaken the armed effort that the decisive blow could be delayed many months, at a corresponding cost in Allied lives.

It is vitally necessary that we maintain the initiative we have attained. And we can't do it by expecting Germany to fold up at any moment. Hitler has been on the offensive. That has been blocked, and even reversed. But once he digs in on a strong defense line, it may take many great battles to crush him.-Altoona Tribune.

LOUISA'S LETTER

Dear Louisa: I am but nineteen years old and my husband is in Arfica. I get awful lonesome. Do you think there would be any harm in my having a date occasionally with one of my old friends? I love my husband dearly. LONESOME-Va.

You were probably the one who just couldn't wait until the war was over to get married, but now, since your husband is gone, you want to enjoy all the blessings of being married and single at the same time. What if you are lonesome? What about your husband in Africa, or probably, Sicily, by now? He has more to worry about than just being lonesome, I imagine. It is all right to go to parties and socials with a crowd, but it is definitely not cricket

to be having dates with other men while your husband is fighting to keep us free. There is plenty of work to do to keep all of the girls and women in the United States busy, if they will only look for it and busy people have very little time to think about being bored. So get to work.

LOUISA.

Dear Louisa: You are always advising people to plan their spending and saving together, but what do you do when you have a husband who refuses to discuss anything relating to money? Who looks as if you have a deep laid plot to extract an extra dollar from during the war? him if you mention the increase in cost of anything-who always tells the bad news about finances, but never mentions the fact when money is easy? How can I save when I have nothing to begin with?

It would take a wiser woman than I to tell you what to do under such circumstances. Your letter should be required reading for brides, however, as it will make them realize how much easier it is to have such problems settled before marriage than afterwards. I am afraid you have waited too long to do anything about your situation. LOUISA.

Many occupations are closed to the person who cannot talk plainly. For example, few employers would hire salesman, stenographer, clerk, or elephone operator who cannot talk plainly. If the reader will just stop realize how important a role speech plays in our everyday lives, he will appreciate the handicap suffered by the speech defective in social, as well as in occupational activities

Speech defects are of several types. In the most prevalent type, the individual is unable to produce the speech sounds correctly. The most common disorders of articulation are baby talk, lisping, and foreign accent. Another type, stuttering, is characterized by an interruption in the rhythm of speech, such as the inability to get speech started, or repetition of certain sounds. Disorders of voice include nasality, harsh voices, raspy voices, high-pitched voices, etc. The causes of these disorders may be either structural or functional. If there is some difficulty in the speech structure such as a hole in the roof of the mouth, growths on the vocal chords, or poor muscular control, the cause of the defect would be classed as structura; and the condition should be remedied before speech training is undertaken. Parents frequently think that their speech defective child is tongue-tied. However, it is only very rarely that tongue tie is the cause of speech defect.

If a child's speech is defective and there is no accompanying defect in his speech organs, the cause is described as functional. This means that the defect is the result of improper learning. To illustrate, it is obvious that not all speech sounds are learned at the same time. The sounds, i, r, and s are usually the to say "red" before he has learned to produce the r sound, it is natural for him to say something nearly like use it themselves when talking to the child, it is only natural that it most vicious causes of articulatory disorders is the adult use of baby talk when talking with children. Since imitation plays such an important role in the learning of speech. parents should consider it a responsibility to use the same type of speech when talking with their children as they do when talking with Just recently one parwas giving his child speech lessons. "I would like to know what's going on here," he snorted. "I am sending my girl here to learn school work not talking." Speech re-education is frequently a long-time job and requires as much practice as learning to play a musical instrument.

It is a common misconception that children will outgrow their speech marked that she didn't worry about as they grow older." It was pointed they had before they started to school.
