Sunday School Lesson

A HOLY PEOPLE.

International Sunday School Lesson for September 5, 1943.

Golden Text: "Ye shall be held for I am holy."—I Peter 1:16.

Lesson Text: Leviticus 19: 1-4; 11-18; 32-34.

This lesson is very closely associated with the lesson given for our consideration on August 22nd. As we make this study of the book of Leviticus, let us try to realize anew that in one's attitude toward God and in one's relationship to his fellowman, God expects the very best on the part of his people.

Leviticus, the third book of the Pentateuch, was written by Moses probably during the first year of the Exodus, while the Israelites were camped at Sinai. This book may be thought of as being a handbook or manual which God gave to direct the priests and worshippers in the time of Moses. It is made up almost entirely of laws—ceremonial laws governing man's relationship to God, and moral and civil laws governing man's relationship to his fellow man.

The very name of the book, Leviticus, suggests its nature. Since the book deals with priestly things, and since the sons of Levi were the priests, the Septuagint translators called it "Leviticus," of which Leviticus is the Latinized form.

Instructions at the religious services and ceremonials occupy a large part of the book.

The following outline of the book of Leviticus is the one generally accepted:

- 1 The Law of Sacrifice, chapters 1-7.
2 The Consecration of the Priesthood, chapters 8-10.
3 The Law of the Clean and the Unclean, with an Appendix on the Day of Atonement, chapters 11-16.
4 The Law of Holiness, chapters 17-27, with an Appendix on vows.

Even a casual reading of Leviticus reveals that the theme of the book is "holiness." Upon first consideration, one might think that the contents could have little bearing on present-day living, but a more detailed study proves that this is not the case—that the rules and regulations laid down for these Israelites in the ages long past are interesting and profitable for this age in which we are living.

It is worthwhile to realize that these laws were given as a means to an end, and not an end in themselves. They were given to impress the children of Israel with the fact that God wanted them to be a holy people. In order to serve Jehovah, the holy God, the Israelites had to separate themselves from their idolatrous surroundings. They were a "Chosen People"—chosen for a special purpose. That purpose was to reveal to the world the one and only True God and through them, the holiness and glory of the world.

In order to accomplish this purpose, it was necessary for them to be disciplined to be obedient unto the laws laid down by God himself. In this regard, Dummelow says, "A holy God, dwelling amid a holy people in a holy land—it would be unfair to say that there were not many in Israel who say this truth beneath the surface of ceremonial, and were by its means prepared for the coming of Him who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth."

The family unit seems to have been very important to the Hebrew race and, we believe, as the family life of a nation disintegrates, so that nation falls apart, socially, politically and religiously. In Leviticus and also in Exodus, in the Ten Commandments, the Hebrews are reminded of the relationship which exists between parents and children. This relationship between earthly parents and their children should be such that it would remind them of their relationship between their Heavenly Father and His children.

Of course, the proper observance of the Sabbath is one way of showing proper respect for God. One who loves God will devote His day to rest and worship. People cannot be holy without keeping God's day holy. The Israelites were warned against idolatry. On every side, nations worshipped various forms and various gods. The Israelites were to worship the one and only True God. If man's relationship to his God is right, then his relationship to his fellow man will also be right. Justice, love, mercy, sympathy, loving kindness and all such virtues, which we have come to know of as "Christian virtues," will naturally be evident in a "holy life."
