Fat
If fat is to be rendered from meat or waste pieces of meat, slice raw potatoes and drop in the pan until browned. This will clarify the fat and leave it like clear lard.

Kid Gloves
When mending kid gloves, button-hole around the edge of the tear before drawing together. Then oversew the button-hole together and the repair will last longer.

Grease
To prevent the grease from splattering and popping when frying any food, sprinkle a little flour in the frying pan.

Germany is about to enjoy splendid isolation.

POST NAMED IN MEMORY OF LOCAL SOLDIERS

The battle was in the making in the Argonne. The camp was pitched along what passed for a road at the edge of the forest. It had been raining without interruption for days, and even to be outdoors was a hardship. To travel with heavy army equipment over sodden and shell-pocked roads, most of the time within easy range of enemy guns, was labor of the most tiring kind.

The little group sleeping in the tent had arrived at the camp-site after dark. They knew the German artillery positions weren't far away, for a steady booming of guns to the east indicated that the enemy was not resting. They didn't know that just on the other side of the area where they had pitched their camp was an Allied ammunition dump. An artillery shell landing in the dump may have had tragic results for the entire group.

Shortly after camp had been made for the night, German artillery to the east began a systematic shelling of the area, on a small but persistent scale. The shells at first landed some distance from the camp and at the foot of the hill on which the camp was situated. Gradually the shells moved up the hillside, but the tired men, weary from their day's toil and accustomed to weeks of shelling, paid no attention. They were sleeping.

The occupants of the shelter were Pvt. Edward B. Brooks and Pvt. Charles F. Doll, known in the outfit as "wagoners" because they drove teams which hauled artillery supplies; Pvt. Russell Confer and Pvt. Victor Dawson, all of Bellefonte. In approved army style the men were sleeping side by side with one man's head opposite the feet of the next man.

Elsewhere throughout an area of about one-half square mile was an assortment of tents and shelters in which a whole brigade of the 53rd Artillery was encamped for the night.

The barrage, apparently a small one maintained more as a nuisance to the Allied forces than for any hope of heavy property damage, continued to move closer to the camp. A shell came across about every twelve minutes with almost clocklike regularity. Midnight came, and September 21, 1918, became just one more day in the history of World War I.

At about 12:04 a. m. there was a blinding, rending crash just above and to one side of the shelter in the center of the picket line. A high explosive artillery shell had struck a tree beside the tent, the point of impact being about six or seven feet above the ground. The casing of the shell burst into hundreds of jagged pieces, showering the area, and particularly the tent, with broken metal.

Some time passed before the full story of the shell's destruction was known to other members of the Company. Members of the 108th camping in the vicinity were awakened by the crash, but because of the darkness and rain, and because any light might have drawn concentrated fire from the Germans, they were forced to grope their way to the picket line to learn what damage had resulted.

Pvt. Doll was carried out of the shattered remnants of the shelter. "Don't mind me, get Brooks!" he told his rescuers. "I think he's in bad shape." A moment later Pvt. Doll complained of the cold and asked friends to cover him. As they placed a blanket over him he said: "Put me down, I'm dying." Those were his last words. A piece of the shell had entered the region of his heart.

Brooks was found dead inside the wreckage of the shelter. Judging from the extent and nature of his wounds, death had been instantaneous.

Pvt. Confer, shot through the right hand, left arm, and in the head, and suffering from a severe neck wound, remained conscious and crawled from the scene. After a time he realized he was going away from camp and turned back. He was in a serious condition when companions found him, but recovered in a base hospital and arrived on the front in Belgium to rejoin his outfit the day the Armistice was signed. Dawson escaped with a wound of the head suffered when a piece of shrapnel penetrated his lower jaw. He was taken to a base hospital for treatment. The same shell also wounded four other soldiers, all of them Philadelphia men.

The iron shelter was blown to bits, but the protection it afforded those inside probably prevented additional fatal injuries. Of the 25 horses tethered on the picket line, 13 were killed and most of the others suffered wounds.

Brooks and Doll were the first two members of Troop L, Bellefonte, to lose their lives in World War I. Among other Bellefonte men in the same camp with Brooks and Doll the night they lost their lives were: Harry E. "Deppy" Dunlap, the late Luther Crissman, Captain Herbert S. Miller, the late Arthur Beezer, George R. Norris, Peter DeLallo, William Alkey, and possibly some others. Some of them took part in the rescue of those who survived the shell blast and were present the following day when the bodies of the two victims were placed in rude graves along the road, with their temporary resting places marked by rough wooden crosses. An improvised fence was built to enclose the graves. An army chaplain officiated at the ceremonies.

The remaining members of the division then went on to fight the battle of the Argonne, later were sent to Belgium and were in action there when the Armistice put an end to hostilities on November 11.

After the war the United States Government made arrangements to bring back to this country any war dead whose relatives wanted the bodies for burial at home. In accordance with these arrangements the remains of Charles Doll, sealed in a metal casket, arrived in Bellefonte on Wednesday, August 10, 1921—nearly three years from the time the German shell exploded over the little iron shelter—and were taken to the F. E. Nagney Funeral Home on South Allegheny street. The same afternoon the casket was taken to the home of the deceased's parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. William Doll, on East Bishop Street, where a guard of honor was posted until the time of the funeral.

Requiem Mass was celebrated in St. John's Catholic church the following morning, with Rev. William E. Downes, rector of the church, officiating. Members of Brooks-Doll Post, No. 33, attended the services in a body under the escort of the I. O. O. F. Band, then one of Bellefonte's leading musical organizations. All Bellefonte stores and business places were closed from 10 to 11 a. m. in tribute to the memory of the deceased veteran, and a large throng of mourning friends and relatives followed the remains to the Catholic cemetery where interment was made.

The body of Pvt. Brooks arrived here from New York on Tuesday, September 13, 1921—just nine days less than three years after his death. The flag-draped casket, in charge of a special escort of one soldier from the Regular Army, was taken to the Nagney Funeral Home where a guard of honor was posted until Sunday, when services were held in St. John's Lutheran church, Bellefonte.

The services were in charge of Brooks-Doll Post, and

Rev. Wilson P. Ard, pastor of the Bellefonte Lutheran church and then chaplain of the Post, officiated. After the church ceremony the casket was placed on a Machine Gun Squadron truck and was taken to the Advent Cemetery three miles north of Milesburg for interment.

Brooks and Doll were well known members of Bellefonte's younger set on April 10, 1917, when they, together with many other local young men, went to the Armory at the corner of Spring and Lamb streets to enlist in Troop L. War had been declared four days before but because Captain H. L. Curtin, commanding officer of the local troop, was out of town, no enlistments were taken until his return.

They accompanied the troop to Camp Hancock, Georgia, September 11, 1917, and after about three months there the cavalry was disbanded and its members were assigned to various other units at the camp. Brooks and Doll and a number of other men were assigned to the Supply Company of the 108th Field Artillery.

In their new post of duty the two sailed from New York and landed at Liverpool, England, after an uneventful voyage. After a several days' rest in England the Company crossed the channel to LaHavre, France. Prior to the deaths of the two local men the company participated in seven engagements with the enemy.

Charles F. Doll was born in Bellefonte on June 19, 1897, hence was 21 years old at the time of his death. He was graduated from the Bellefonte High School in the class of 1915, and shortly afterwards went to work for C. D. Casebeer, local jeweler, where he was employed at the time of his enlistment. Before leaving New York for France he was to have had a furlough of 48 hours, but while he was arranging to come home for a brief visit with relatives and friends the furlough was reduced to 24 hours and he was unable to make the trip. The only surviving member of Doll's immediate family at this time is a sister, Miss Marie Doll, East Bishop Street, Bellefonte.

Edward Bull Brooks was a son of the late Orlin E. and Rachael Brooks, then of Boggs township, and was 20 years of age at the time of his death. He was born at Leidy, Pa., and while he was an infant his parents moved to Boggs Township, near Milesburg. His survivors at this time include four brothers and a sister; Raymond N. Brooks, Bellefonte, former Centre County Treasurer; Frank, of Pleasant Gap; Luther, residing in West Virginia; Dale, of Bellefonte, R. D., and Mrs. Walter Dunkleberger, of Bellefonte.

The Bellefonte American Legion Post was organized in 1919 after several preliminary meetings of a small group of local World War I veterans. The first meeting was held in the third floor rooms of the Bush Arcade building, and while there are no records of the manner in which the Post was officially organized and named, Legionnaires are of the belief that the name "Brooks-Doll Post" was first suggested by Harry Dunlap.

Although Post No. 33 was not chartered by the National American Legion until December 20, 1926, the organization officially came into being in 1919, and the Post's first officers were elected that year, J. Mac Heintz being the first Commander. Charter members of the Post, according to a list on file at the legion home, were:

- HOWARD TAYLOR JOHN SAYLOR
 - EDWIN M. GROVE CHARLES CRUSE
 - LOREN A. RAY CHARLES E. GATES
 - ARTHUR C. DALE W. FRED REYNOLDS, JR.
 - THOMAS F. LAMB ELLIOTT MORRIS
 - PAUL M. GENTZEL JOHN G. LOVE
 - HARRY E. DUNLAP GIDEON C. PAYNE
 - HENRY KELLER, JR. F. W. TANNER
- The infant Post's first meeting place was in the P. O. S. of a Hall on West High Street, and it moved into its first home in rooms in the Democratic Watchman building in 1921 while Gilbert D. Nolan was commander. Later the Post moved to the third floor of the old Centre County Bank building, now the Farmers National Bank, and in 1926, when Harry E. Dunlap was commander, the Post purchased the Dr. John Sebring property on East Howard Street—the property which has become the organization's permanent home.

Legion members recall that when the Sebring property was purchased, many members volunteered their services in remodeling and refitting the property for use by the Post. Mr. Dunlap, a general contractor in private life, supervised most of the remodeling and redecoration of the home, and about 1928, when the home was remodeled and a large addition built at the rear of the structure, Legionnaire Dunlap again was in charge of the work.

The Post, which began with only 16 charter members, now numbers 320 members. This figure does not include the social club members, the Auxiliary or the junior organizations.

- Members who have served as Commanders of the Post and the years during which they served are as follows:
- J. Mac Heintz, 1919 Walter W. Gheriety, 1929-30-31
 - W. Fred Reynolds, Jr., 1920 Malcolm L. Wetzler, 1932
 - Gilbert D. Nolan, 1921 James Morrison, Jr., 1933-34
 - John B. Payne, 1922 Loren A. Ray, 1935
 - Arthur C. Dale, 1923 Gerald A. Robinson, 1936
 - John G. Love, 1924 Roy Jones, 1936
 - O. B. Mallin, 1924 Robert T. Willard, 1937
 - Clarence Williams, 1925 Walter S. Zahniser, 1938
 - Harry E. Dunlap, 1926-27 Samuel D. Rhinesmith, 1939
 - Russell S. Rider, 1927-28 Herbert M. Beezer, 1940
 - Francis H. Crawford, 1928 Alex Stergiakki, 1941
 - Vincent N. Taylor, 1928 Edward L. Miller, 1942
- Leonard R. Glenn, 1943

In this history no attempt is made to evaluate the position the Post occupies in the activities and welfare of Bellefonte and vicinity. Such evaluation would necessarily have to include the work of the Auxiliary, of the junior organizations, the Social Club, and the many branches of civic life in which the Legion for years has played a leading role.

Neither has any attempt been made to eulogize the two men for whom the Post was named. Men honored as Brooks and Doll have been honored by the Bellefonte American Legion Post, need no further eulogy. They will be known as living symbols of the honor due to all soldiers of all wars who give up their lives in defense of their country.

NO
ARMISTICE TODAY

TWENTY-FIVE years ago this world went wild with joy. The world cried "Peace". But there was no peace. There was only a truce.

This time there must be no truce. This time we are grimly determined to see the job through. We will make whatever sacrifice is necessary. We won't let it happen again.

Armistice Day this year marks the beginning of a new call upon our patriotism. A call directed especially to the people of this community.

One of the gravest threats to our all-out war effort is a shortage of pulpwood. We who live in the pulpwood-cutting areas are asked to make good that shortage. We will be paid for our wood, of course. But we are asked to do it as our special part in the war—backing up our own boys in the service.

In whose honor will you cut your cord? A son? A brother? A friend?

Give us his name, and yours, so that both may be entered on the roll of honor. No boy shall die because we failed.

FILL OUT THE COUPON AND MAIL TODAY!

CHAIRMAN, PULPWOOD COMMITTEE
THE CENTRE DEMOCRAT

In honor of _____
I pledge to cut an EXTRA CORD of pulpwood during the drive period—Nov. 11 to Dec. 11.
