nery school in Washington, D. C., and now is in line for a promotion.

At the time of the Japanese sneak attack on Pearl Harbor, Caldwell was out at sea on maneuvers and did not get back to Pearl Harbor until December 8, the day following the attack. The destruction wreaked upon port and harbor facilities, and upon airfields and other installations was in great contrast to the peaceful condition which prevailed when he left.

At the present time Caldwell is at sea with the South Pacific Fleet and until his return to the United States, his wife is living with her mother, Mrs. Flora DeLallo, of East Beaver street.

Mrs. Caldwell was living in Honolulu at the time the Japanese attacked the islands, but resided outside of the bombed zone, although she kept informed by radio as to what was taking place and what civilians were to do. Her thoughts were upon her husband, from whom she had not heard since he left on maneuvers. Consequently when a Naval messenger appeared at her home, she feared that he brought her bad news. Instead, the messenger gave her the information that Joe was all right but was too busy in the harbor to write even a note.

Mrs. Caldwell's fears for her husband's safety were heightened because during her lifetime she has received more than the average number of messages of "bad news." As a young girl her father met a tragic death in a Bellefonte limestone quarry. Her brother, the late Joseph DeLallo, of Bellefonte, a member of the Undine Fire Company, met a violent death at Lewis-town when the ladder on which he was giving a demonstration broke and precipitated him to the street.

The progress of the Fifth Army through Italy brings to her mind thoughts of her father and her father's people, for they live in a town through which the army recently passed on its road to Rome.

Mrs. Caldwell is definitely a "Navy woman." During the dark days after Pearl Harbor when she heard the question asked on every side, "Where is the United States Navy?" Mrs. Caldwell, angered, was wont to reply: "If you want to know where the Navy is, go join it!"

not send telegrams to a serviceman from his family, or for his family. Mrs. Fred Warner, chairman, and Mrs. B. G. Lindquist, volunteer worker, are receiving many of these requests and wish it to be known they can only work with the military or Red Cross Field Director and cannot sponsor telegrams between family and son.

Volunteer manning of the Red Cross office on High street has been discontinued due to lack of proper heating facilities, so all inquiries should be made to Mrs. Lindquist, phone 2445, of Mrs. Warner, 2246.

At the monthly meeting Mrs. Charles Mensch reported the Chapter quota of surgical dressings completed and shipped. The quotas for the coming months have been doubled and all workers are urged to come out and lend their assistance. Surgical dressing units have been set up in Milledburg and Pleasant Gap.

The Nurses' Aides are being called upon to help out for extra periods in the hospital, having been graduated from their course in the past month. Mrs. W. W. Belg, chairman of the branch, expressed the appreciation of the aides and herself to the hospital and doctors for giving these girls their pre-training physical examinations and X-rays free of charge.
