The frost can be taken out of fruits and vegetables by putting them in cold water and allowing them to remain until their plump, fair appearance indicates that the frost has disappeared.

Little News, Plenty of Views In Old Paper

iff's sales listed by Sheriff George I. Leidy, and a notice by John McCalmont, Jr., secretary, that the Nittany Valley Young Peoples' Total Abstinence Society would hold its first annual meeting in the Lick Run school room at "early candlelight" on Saturday, November 5.

The ancient paper indicates that 107 years ago local news was a positive drug on the market. The only way any local person is mentioned in the entire paper is in the advertisements. The only story which might have been classed as a local news story is one listing letters remaining unclaimed at the Bellefonte postoffice.

Back in those days there was no postal delivery system and unless a person made regular calls at the postoffice to see if there was any mail for him, he didn't get his mail. So it became the custom for newspapers to publish regular lists of unclaimed letters. The publication of such lists in newspapers, hence was a worthwhile service, and subscribers scanned the lists eagerly to see whether there was any mail for them.

In a small advertisement Dr. H. Montgomery "offers his services to the citizens of Bellefonte and its vicinity as a practitioner of Medicine and Surgery." His office was on Allegheny street, near Samuel Morrison's Hotel, and directly opposite the residence of James P. Gregg.

David Meiss advertised that a red and white spotted cow strayed from his premises in Potter township, and offered a liberal reward for its return. The cow, he explained, was about six or eight years old, with short, straight horns.

C. Zekind & Reppeler offered to pay the highest prices for furs of every description at their store in Bellefonte.

G. W. Graffius offered for sale "gorn herons, just received," and in other small advertisements listed for sale such items as "rock powder" (presumably limestone), halter and trace chains, window glass, etc. Their store was in the corner room of the "Arcade."

Neil Harrold, "thankful for past favors, respectfully informs his friends and former customers that he has opened a Front Shop, in the shop recently occupied by Thomp Mason Miller, on Allegheny street, one door south of H. Hume's store, and directly opposite the store of Gilliland and Rankin, where he will keep constantly on hand an assortment of gentlemen's boots and shoes and ladies' boots and shoes." He noted that Iron Masters' orders would be taken in payment.

William W. Kirk had just received, in addition to his former stock, a new supply of fresh drugs, paints, oils and dyes, also groceries and hardware, consisting of pocket pistols, percussion caps, butts and hinges, slates and pencils, glass bureau knobs, carpenter's patent locks, flush bolts, steel squares, sadirons, gridirons, spring rat traps, spars, trunk locks, wrought iron pipes, sash latches, patent saws, chairmakers' bits, brass japanned dearnum mounting and German steel, also a general assortment of shoemakers' findings, whips, lashes, etc.

Edward McGarvey announced that he had leased from Mr. Harris, for a term of years, the "Bellefonte Foundry," and that the foundry was prepared to fill all orders. He also was to sell ploughs, cooking stoves, common, woods, and coal stoves. Improved country produce and Iron Masters' orders would be accepted in payment for castings.

In addition there are advertisements of an adjourned Orphans' Court Sale and a notice by James McCalmont, Henry Hoy, John Emerick, James Harbison and Henry F. W. Schultz, school directors of Walker township, that they wished to engage seven or eight competent persons qualified to teach under the Common School System.

Considering its age, the newspaper is in an excellent state of preservation. It is somewhat yellowed and is torn at the folds, but is quite legible. It must remain as a part of the permanent records at the Court House, for the sale list for which it serves as a cover is a permanent record, and whoever filed the list on October 21, 1840, marked the date of filing on the newspaper.

Most of the very early files of this newspaper were destroyed in a fire and there are no known duplicates in existence.

Police Still Hope for 'Break' in Murder

the progress of the investigation. Hartman, familiarly known as "Sparky," declares "It is a unique crime. There are several angles which seem to defy all logical solution and the answers probably never will be known until we find the person who is responsible."

One ray of positive hope was reflected by both Hartman and Moltenko, however. Both declared "When we have the right man, we'll know it." While they declined to simplify that statement they declared that police have evidence which will definitely prove whether a suspect is the "right" one or not.

In reviewing his part in the investigation, Detective Hartman declared that investigations in a college town always are quite difficult because of the transient nature of much of the population.

"Add to that," he said, "the fact that the armed forces have called heavily upon the young male population and our difficulties are greatly increased."

"Rachel Taylor's slayer might be anywhere in the United States—or anywhere in the world," Hartman commented, inferring that he may have been called into the armed forces.

The investigators pointed out that the Taylor case is unusual in that police so far have received practically no "breaks." Of course, they say, there have been a number of suspects, but without a single exception all of them have proved of no account insofar as solving the murder goes.

"Many a difficult case is solved through police receiving either directly or indirectly some bit of information which may seem insignificant, but which puts police on the right track," Hartman said. "So far we've run down thousands of 'tips' but none of them have led to dead ends."

The detective, turning to specific points in the investigation, declared: "If we could account for one solitary minute of time—the minute between the time Miss Taylor was last seen walking to Atherton Hall, and when a car drove west on College avenue—we'd be well on the way to solving the case."

Hartman declared that in that minute the slayer, supposedly in a car, picked up Miss Taylor, loaded her bundles in the car, and drove away, presumably going east on College avenue. The occupants of the car going west on that street noticed nothing unusual—didn't even see the car in which Miss Taylor must have been lured to her death.

Rachel Taylor, a quiet, studious girl, who had few dates and who was more interested in athletics than in men, met her death while she was on her way back to college from an Easter vacation spent with her parents in Wildwood, N. J.

She got off a bus at 1:30 a. m., and was seen walking on College avenue toward Atherton Hall where she roomed, by a number of persons who knew her. Her arms were loaded with a coat, a traveling case, books, notebook, handbag and other items.

She was last seen crossing McAllister street near the Methodist church. What happened from that time on is believed to be the exclusive knowledge of the slayer.

Direct cause of her death was severe head wounds inflicted by some heavy instrument, but examination of the body revealed what is believed to have been deliberate mutilation. The slayer's coat, bag, and notebook, textbook and handbag were found strewn just inside a fence on a snow covered field across a rural road from the west side of the Shiloh church. Out in the middle of the rural road police found a blood-stained man's handkerchief, and leading from the road to the fence were several footprints, believed to have been made when the slayer walked to the fence to dispose of his victim's possessions.

"That's how the Rachel Taylor murder investigation stands today. In their quest for information police have visited the victim's home town and have gone to nearby states to check on various angles. None of these leads have borne fruit.

"We're working and we expect to continue to work to apprehend the slayer," Detective Hartman concluded. "Maybe one of these days we'll succeed."

Watercress salad is delicious if it is served with French dressing made tart with lemon, and sprinkled with Roquefort cheese.

KIWANIS CLUB IS 20 YEARS OLD

W. Harrison Walker, a Charter Member, Speaks at Anniversary Event

Twenty years of activity was celebrated by the Bellefonte Kiwanis Club at its weekly luncheon meeting held Tuesday at the Penn Belle Hotel. The principal speaker at the anniversary meeting was W. Harrison Walker, of Bellefonte, one of the founders and charter members of the organization.

Among other charter members who spoke were: J. K. Johnston, George Hazel, Edward R. Owens, Ray C. Noll, Earl K. Stock and W. J. Emerick. Herman Hazel received honorable mention for perfect attendance at club meetings since he became a member 17 years ago.

In reviewing the accomplishments of the club, Mr. Walker mentioned specifically a drive for funds for a new wing for the Centre County Hospital which the group sponsored shortly after its organization, and Mr. Walker and Ray C. Noll, president of the County Hospital Corporation, suggested that the club organize another drive to provide a much-needed wing to the institution.

Bond C. White, club president, presided at the session and Rev. Francis P. Davis, chairman of the program, was toastmaster. The Kiwanis singers, club quartet, sang two numbers.

The club was organized on February 25, 1924, with Rev. Wilson P. Ard as the first president.

Other officers of the original club were: Frank Crawford, vice president; John B. Payton, secretary; Harry Rossman, treasurer; Arthur J. Sloop, trustee. Directors were John G. Love, Rt. Rev. William E. Downes, Oscar Gray, George Hazel, W. J. Emerick, Edward Owens and John M. Bullock.

Extra Care For Early Chicks

Early broods of chicks need extra care in order to avoid the more common types of troubles affecting the breathing organs at this time of the year. Such disorders include colds, gasping, bronchitis, and the different forms of brooder pneumonia, all of which have been sources of trouble in flocks where attention to little details may have been neglected.

How the Chicks Become Susceptible to Infection

Poultry health authorities have found bacterial or virus infections to be direct causes of these troubles. The contributing factors are mostly shortcomings in management that cause exposure to cold, damp weather, irregular temperatures or poor ventilation in the brooder house, drafts, and overcrowding. Such conditions tend to reduce the vitality and resistance of the chicks and, thereby make them susceptible to infection.

The Brooding Rules to Observe

To avoid respiratory troubles is possible by observing the rules of successful brooding. A brief review of these rules is given here:

1. Do not brood more than three chicks per square foot of brooder house floor space, two chicks per square foot is better.
2. See that chicks are not exposed to cold, damp weather. Keep them indoors.
3. Regulate the temperature of the brooder carefully to keep the correct warmth at all times. Start the chicks at 95 degrees and reduce temperature five degrees a week until 70 degrees is reached.
4. Provide a good starter mash and allow at least two inches of feeder space per chick on each side of the feeder.
5. Provide sufficient drinking water by supplying 2 1/2 to 3 gallon fountains with bases or pans which are at least 13 inches around. Fountain need not be filled more than half full first few weeks. Use a reliable drinking-water medicine in the water from the first day.
6. Keep brooder house well ventilated, but avoid drafts. As an added precaution, spray the chicks with an inhalant spray. This will help keep the air clear and wholesome.
7. Clean and renew the litter as often as needed and keep the brooder house clean and sanitary by use of a good all-round farm disinfectant.

Swans Continue To Idle; Ignore Spring

swans, nest-building isn't a thing to be completed overnight, for the nests often weigh as much as 70 pounds, they say.

Sam Poorman, garageman whose establishment is located nearby the stream, and who therefore keeps well informed about the doings of his neighbors—the ducks, the swans and the fish—reported yesterday that last week one day one of the swans got out of the water, picked out a spot on the island and began measuring distances with its neck.

"It stretched out its neck as though picking up bits of wood and grass, and seemed to be tucking the bits around her (or him) as she (or he) sat on the grass," Sam related.

"I thought it was building a nest," he went on, "but in a short time it jumped back into the water and went to great lengths to get the little bits of wood, moss and mud off its snobby feathers!"

"The darned bird hasn't showed any signs of going on with the work!" Sam concluded with disgust.

Truck Damaged at Milesburg Crossing

The driver of the towing truck, realizing the machine behind was loaded, attempted to continue on over the crossing.

As a result, the tow chain snapped and the loaded truck went out of control and ran across the tracks to the west of the crossing. The machine came to a halt perilously close to the creek embankment.

Damage to the loaded truck was estimated at about $150. The other machine escaped damage and neither driver was injured.

Milk.

To prevent milk from sticking to the bottom of the pan when heating it, rinse out the saucuppan with a little hot water before placing the milk in it.

Umbrellas will give much longer wear if they are placed in the rack with the handles down. If this is done it will prevent the water from running down and rusting the wires.
