WE'RE MAKING THE MOST OF WHAT WE HAVE
America's Bell System today is providing service for several million more telephones than it did at the start of the war—in spite of the fact that it has not been possible to add materially to the telephone plant.
We have used up most of the "margins" built into our telephone plant.
We're working available facilities at maximum capacity.
We're using practically every pair of telephone wires, every item of central office equipment.
We've pressed into service every type of telephone instrument, new and old, on our shelves.
Production of telephone equipment for normal civilian needs has all but stopped. Western Electric—manufacturing branch of the Bell System—is engaged almost exclusively in the production of electronic and other communications equipment for the Army and Navy.
And there's no let-up in the demands of war. The Army and Navy need everything we can make.
This is why many people who want service today must go on "waiting lists."
We regret keenly that anyone should have to wait for telephone service. But we know this. No one would want us to put our armed forces on a "waiting list."
