LOUISA'S LETTER

Dear Louisa:
Two good friends of ours have recently been divorced.

When they were married my husband and I ran around with them a great deal and had them to our house whenever we gave a party. We like both of them very much and now we have a problem on our hands.

When we have a party, which one shall we invite or would it be embarrassing to have them both? Please help us.

"PUZZLED"

New Jersey

Answer:
It all depends on the people and under what conditions they separated.

If they parted in a friendly manner, it is just possible that they won't mind seeing each other but if the separation was a bitter one, it will not do at all to have them both present at the same time.

Why don't you talk to them and explain, in the latter case, that you will have one the first time you have a party and the other one on the second occasion. You would naturally invite the wife to the first party but explain your reasons to the man before you do so.

LOUISA.

Dear Louisa:
I have a son who has finished college but he still makes careless grammatical errors.

He seems sensitive about it when I correct him but I feel that I am doing him an injustice to let him continue a habit that will handicap him in his work later on.

Is it better to have everything pleasant or to keep on telling him not to use "learn" for "teach" or "lay" for "lie"?

MOTHER.

Maryland.

Answer:
If you were talking about your husband, I would say to let him alone because if there is one thing in the world that a man despises, it is to have his wife correcting him about anything. But in the case of your son I think it is different.

Of course, it would have been much easier if you had started years ago and had him speaking correctly before he got grown. Since you did not do it then, it is up to you to do it now.

It is much better for him to be corrected by you than to have people criticizing him behind his back.

FEVER

About fifty years ago fever itself was thought to be a disease. In reality it is a symptom of certain diseases. It is caused by the system trying to get rid of germs and infections by burning them up. There are people who remember when a patient who was suffering from fever and thirst was not allowed to have water on the inside or the outside.

Then a reaction came and Germany began to advocate the Grand bath in typhoid fever. Patients were put into tubs of ice water to reduce the temperature. It was very popular among the doctors in the German army, and though the strong young soldiers stood it quite well, by and by more humane and less strenuous methods came into use.

At any rate, since there is better sanitation generally, and great numbers are now immunized against typhoid fever the cases are far less common. If one does occur, the treatment throughout is so superior to that which formerly prevailed that the majority of them get well.

Only a few years ago it began to be noticed that certain forms of insanity, often accompanied by paralysis, recovered after a spell of malaria. At first the doctors concluded that the germs of malaria had some thing to do with it. They thought it probable that they antagonized or destroyed the germs that caused paralysis and insanity. Further observation, convinced them that this theory was wrong. Then they began to experiment by allowing infected mosquitoes to bite patients suffering from this particular type of insanity. After the attack of malaria, with its accompanying chills and fever, the patient was cured by quinine.

After their recovery from the fever, many of these sufferers were discharged as cured. Others were improved. Some were not helped.

The research workers began a systematic study of the effect of high temperatures on the body. It was discovered that "fever" is a process that aids in the removal or destruction of injurious substances which get into the body. It results in an increase of white corpuscles, which are the fighting men or soldiers of the body. It is their business to rush to the scene of danger when germs invade the organism. This they do so effectively that millions of them die in an effort to protect the body against disease. Then, too, the high temperature causes an increase in other cells that fight these invaders. The fever enables the whole system to wake up all the processes of defense, and to put a brave fight against all agencies that would cripple or destroy it.

At the present time physicians are not so much concerned about reducing fever. Instead they frequently use means for causing high temperature in patients in order to arouse the fighting forces to go to war and drive out the invading disease germs.

Some day it will go out of fashion to give fever reducing drugs. Sponging a sufferer in tepid water to reduce a high temperature often adds to his comfort. This method does not depress the heart.

When you or your children get a rise of temperature, go to bed. It is safer for a doctor. He will insist that you remain in bed to rest your heart. He will know if, and when, it is best to reduce the fever.

This is the time of the year to make a special effort in the Victory Garden if you expect to get something to eat out of it.

Urge Hitler to Drink Tea

Japan has recognized Adolf Hitler's "nerves" and recommended tea drinking as a remedy, according to a Tokyo radio broadcast recorded by United Press at San Francisco.

The broadcast said that the Japan Tea Drinking Society, in the hope that Hitler "would become addicted to the gentle art of tea drinking to soothe his nerves," had presented to the German Ambassador Heinrich Stahmer a rare tea dish for Hitler.
