Neighbor Reviews New Volume of Poetry

(Continued from page one) happy sense of timing in releasing the volume at this time of year, for Harvey Flink's poetic paintbrush is at its best in autumn. From "Burnish Leaves" we read: The last dead leaves are lying Upon their kindled pyre. I hear the angry hissing Of tiny snakes of fire. Each poem is touched with a painter's magic for color. He describes the yellow chrysanthemum in this figure: The last candle burns On the altar of autumn. In "Winter Sunrise" we catch this crystal clear, etched beauty, Into The spider web Of the bare wood Pours the frosty sunshine, Like music into a web Of silence. In addition to the poems of nature and local color, there is a large group inspired by folk lore and people of mythology. In this group are Mr. Flink's own favorites, "The Merrow" and "Could You Believe in Dryads?" In these, as Clement Wood says, "the poet steps out of Pennsylvania into Fairyland." It is in this group also that we catch the title clue, I could believe that Eiland lay Behind the nearest hill, And listened for a mellow horn, But everything was still. This volume, however, is a far cry from scapular poetry and, on occasion, sounds the depths of human suffering and emotion. There is the breaking of a lonely heart In every woodland sound, The plowshare, personified in a poem by that name, laments its former role as sword, O God of Peace, in dreams I still can feel The quivering of bosoms pierced by steel. And "Symbols," of which Clement Wood says, "any sonneteer in America would have been proud to have written it," is a magnificent still-life picture of grief and frustration. This entire volume is an amazing study in contrasts. With all the robust virility of Jesse Stuart, Mr. Flink writes "Hot Viking Blood Runs Riot in My Veins," "Winter, the Druid," and "On Silver Wings," which begins, He hears the roar of motors overhead And bursts like a young bull From the cattle-shed. With a touch of plaintive tenderness the poet pictures "Book-lover," I hope Saint Peter handed him a key Inscribed with this: "Celestial Library." and with a democratic philosophy markedly Frostian he concludes "The Lantern," I can't forget this neighbor, although I knew him only as lantern glow. In still another mood this versatile artist, with his tongue in his cheek, gives us "Paying the Fiddler" and the sonnet, "Handing My Love the Bluest Flowers that Grow" with the amusing denouement, My poet friend, you are not fool-

County Receives State Recognition

(Continued from page one) 4th War Loan. This is definitely contrary to the record in almost every other county." Continuing, Mr. Rebmann's letter states: "On behalf of the Pennsylvania War Finance Committee I wish to express to you and your associates our sincere appreciation and thanks for the excellent job you have done." On an over-all quota of $2,238,000, a total of $42,418,000 was sold, or 198 per cent of the quota. The quota for E bonds was $895,000 and $1,003,000 was sold, or 112 per cent of the quota. The assignment of all bonds to individuals was $1,594,000, and $1,637,000, or 102 per cent of the quota, was sold. The allocation for corporations, clubs, etc., was $645,000, and $781,000 or 121 per cent of the quota was sold. In reviewing the past campaigns, Mr. Aikens was high in his praise of the work of each of the nine districts leaders and their aides, and of the agricultural committee. Indications now are that the next War Loan campaign will begin in November.

Dust Collector Now In Operation (Continued from page one) tions. It appears this collector is doing a first-rate job of dust elimination. Immediately after putting this latest collector into operation, we called in the manufacturer's engineers, who have spent a week going over both of our large installations. Preliminary efficiency tests have been run and final tests will be made after minor improvements and adjustments are completed as recommended by these engineers. "Contrary to our expectations, so far we have not been able to increase our kiln production to the former high level since the new collector has been operating. Therefore, draft and combustion problems are our chief concern at the moment in order that we may keep abreast of the demand for chemical lime, which still continues critical, as outlined to you in our letter of July 3, 1944. "Very truly yours, "WARNERCOMPANY BELLEFONTE DIVISION John Curtin, Jr., Vice President."

Says Saipan Island of Heat and Filth (Continued from page one) piled high, hundreds of them, after their last Banzai rush on Saipan which I had the fortune or misfortune to be mixed up in. They lay in piles in the spider trenches, on the beaches, everywhere. "One thing which the Japs had, marvelous training in camouflage, concealment, movement. A few Japs and a machine gun or two or an anti-tank gun well dug-in by a cliff can hold up a battalion. You just can't find them—they fire only occasionally and never give away their positions. Searching fire by mortars or artillery does little good because they will be dug into caves in a cliff or a bank so deep nothing but a direct hit will have any effect. And all this theory they use so much in Europe of flanking or encircling to make him pull out is just a waste of time. He doesn't mind being encircled. He was put in position to stay and there he'll be till he's killed. "My memories of Saipan will be more concerned with the dirt, the rain, the smell of your clothes and of the dead than that funny feeling in the pit of the stomach when a mortar shell whistles through the air and lands next door, the whine of machine gun or sniper fire clipping the twigs over your head, the rapid geometry you work out in your head at night as you lay in your slit trench which you haven't dug deep enough because you thought you were in the center of a safe perimeter and anyway you were too tired to drill through the limestone, but which sometime after dark comes under fire from a Jap machine gun hidden in the rocks above you with an occasional grenade tossed down for variety. "Nevertheless, it is the dirt and smell I'll remember most, I believe. The sour stink of your fatigues suit after three weeks in a tropic climate, the filth you accumulate because you never have enough water to satisfy your thirst completely, let alone waste on your face. "The sight of dead Japs lying around makes you feel funny at first. You soon get over that and accept them as part of the scenery, but the smell of their bloated, maggot-covered bodies you never become accustomed to. "C' rations pall on you after a while. One after another you tire of the meat and beans, the stew and the hash, and finally end up by liking best the biscuits which at first you throw away. Eating is a simple process—you open your can of stew, pull your spoon out of your pocket or borrow one from someone who has eaten, wipe it off on your fatigues and set to. "To drink you pour the sand, ants and other foreign material out of your canteen cup, pour in water, add the coffee, and there you are. "Say, I've gotten unusually fluent tonight—I've got to conserve paper a little. "Write when you can. JAY."

ASKS CO-OPERATION OF TRUCK, BUS OPERATORS District Manager R. K. Morgan of the Highway Transport Department, of the Office of Defense Transportation, makes an urgent appeal to operators of heavy motor equipment, such as buses, tank trucks, milk trucks and others using tires of size 8.25 and up, to report immediately to the Altoona District Office of the Highway Transport Department a written record of all buses or trucks laid up because of shortage of such heavy duty tires. Mr. Morgan emphasizes the extreme importance of such reports being made at once whenever such lay-ups occur so that his office may be in a position to furnish prompt information to Washington, where action is being taken to alleviate so far as possible the tire situation. Mr. Morgan stated that a shortage of skilled help in manufacturing heavy duty tires, plus an extraordinary military demand had aggravated the already serious shortage of heavy duty tires, which has resulted in many buses and trucks in highly essential production service being held off the road.
