Seaman Loses Life; Car Strikes Tree

A coroner's jury rendered a verdict that Seaman Smith had met accidental death.

The automobile, a 1942 four-door Plymouth sedan, was virtually demolished.

The Bellefonte seaman, who spent a 10-day leave with his parents in July of this year, enlisted in the Navy in December, 1943. Training was called the following month to Pittsburgh to begin training. He went to Sampson, N. Y., for boot training, and about two weeks after arriving there became ill with spinal meningitis and was confined to the Naval hospital there for three months.

During that time his mother visited him several times. When he recovered he spent a 10-day leave in Bellefonte, and then returned to Sampson to resume boot training, after which he was sent to a technical air school at Memphis, Tenn., where he trained as a gunner.

He asked to be assigned to sea duty and was sent to New Orleans, La., where he was assigned to a ferrying crew. After several weeks training he was transferred last month to the Ingralls Ship Yard at Pascagoula, Miss., where he was assigned to a group which ferried new ships into New York harbor.

Seaman Smith, a graduate of the 1941 class of the Bellefonte High School, took a several months business course at a Harrisburg business school. At the time of entering the service he was employed at the Cornman food market in Bellefonte.

Harry J. Smith was born January 19, 1924, at Altoona, a son of Charles and Grace Bardette Smith. His father, an engineer for the Pennsylvania Railroad, purchased the house they occupy on Valentine street, and moved his family to Bellefonte nine years ago this month. In addition to his parents, a brother and sister, James Smith, of Harrisburg, and Mrs. Roy Evans, of Altoona, also survive.

This week Mr. and Mrs. Smith received the following letter from Lt. C. B. Gray, USNR, commanding officer of the unit with which the county soldier was serving:

"My Dear Mr. and Mrs. Smith: I desire to offer you my personal condolence and that of the members of the crew in the untimely death of your son, Harry Jack Smith, United States Navy, which occurred on 19 September 1944 as result of an automobile accident in Long Beach, Mississippi.

"It is hoped you will find comfort in the knowledge that while Harry was attached to this command, he performed his duties and behaved in keeping with the highest traditions of the Navy. I want you both to know that Harry was a shipmate of whom we were all proud and with whom we were honored to serve.

"The Navy and the nation can ill afford to lose the valuable services of such a person as your son.

"We have had many calls from people outside the Navy who were his friends and they all expressed their sorrow and send you their condolence.

"If there is any further information you may desire now or at a later date, please do not hesitate to correspond.

Sincerely,
C. B. GRAY,
Lieut. USNR,
Commanding Officer."

Rockview, was immediately notified and he and members of the State Police went to Tyrone that night to bring him to the county jail in Bellefonte. At a hearing before Sheriff Abraham Houser at Rockview, Thursday morning, Loesch pleaded guilty to the escape charge, but continued to deny any knowledge of the theft of the Mayes machine. It wasn't until he appeared at Special Court the following morning that he admitted the theft of the car.

Loesch told police that since his escape he had wandered through the woods and that while he had eaten some fruit and herbs he found in the woods, he was finally forced into the open by hunger. The man's minimum term at Rockview would have expired in May 1945.
