TRAPPERS FIND PROPER PELT-HANDLING PAYS

Right Way Brings Higher Prices

More and more, trappers are finding that it pays to handle pelts properly. A survey of marketing centers report that an increasing number are handling pelts with extra care and getting extra money for their efforts.

The yield of a trapline is practically clear profit—a real money-making sideline. But a little extra care in getting pelts ready for market means a lot more cash. The mink and skunk pelts shown below illustrate why correctly handled pelts often bring from $1.00 to $7.50 more per pelt. Correct handling prevents spoilage, and proper shaping makes the furs worth more to manufacturers.

Joseph D. Nunan, Jr., Commissioner of Internal Revenue, has advised all employers that the Individual Income Tax Act of 1944 requires them to file new Withholding Exemption Certificates with their employers not later than December 1, 1944. The new law changed the method of counting exemptions, and therefore made it necessary to get new certificates from all employees who work for wages or salary from which income tax is withheld.

Big Business

A LOT of the writing and talking that's going on these days about "big" business seems to miss one pretty important point. In judging business solely by such things as number of employees, size of payrolls, or volume of sales, it overlooks the size of the job the particular business is required to do.

After all, any business exists because there's a demand for the things it produces or the services it renders. And it must either grow to the size necessary to satisfy these demands, or else make way for a competitor that can provide what is wanted.

The war has shown that America's factories and farms can meet demands that would have been fantastic in pre-war years. This is a big country; there will be as big jobs to be done in peacetime as any the war produced. It will take the right kind of "big" business to do them. And whether it operates a 100-acre farm, a garage, a bank, or an industry with 100,000 employees—this kind of big business, which serves the public satisfactorily and with integrity, will continue to be the foundation of America's strength and security, in peace as in war.
