INTENSIFY MEASURES TO CONTROL RING ROT
Ring rot, a highly infectious potato disease, is spreading each year into new areas and is threatening to become the major menace of potato growers, County Agent R. C. Blaney reveals, as he urges increased attention to those measures which will help curb the spread of the disease. One of the means of spreading the disease is through sacks, barrels, planting machinery or other equipment which has become contaminated by contact with infected potatoes. Infected seed, of course, has aided in spreading the disease, and even a cutting knife, used on diseased potatoes, may carry the ring rot to other potatoes.

Extension plant pathologists of the Pennsylvania State College point out that it is a dangerous practice to replant on land where ring rot was found the previous year. Even though it does not live over the winter in the soil, lightly infected potatoes may sprout as volunteers and endanger the entire crop.

To remain free of ring rot, growers are urged to buy only seed from farms known to be free from disease. Sacks or other containers to be used for seed should be disinfected, as well as bins used for seed. Seed cutters and pickers who have been working with infected potatoes should wear disinfected gloves.

Certification authorities are working harder than ever before to guarantee rot freedom in certified potato seed. But unless certified seed is planted on land where there is no danger of contamination from volunteer plants, and kept free of infection sources, ring rot is likely to appear. With proper management, the disease can be eliminated in one year.

NEW OAT VARIETIES SHOW GOOD YIELDS

Recently developed oat varieties have shown good yields, reports R. C. Blaney, county agent, who advises Centre county farmers to buy known varieties of proven merit and not gamble on untried and nondescript seed.

Of the new strains, Vicland and Tama were outstanding producers in 1944 oat variety demonstrations conducted in cooperation with extension agronomists of the Pennsylvania State College. Both were far ahead of standard varieties.

In 43 demonstrations Vicland had yielded 51.5 bushels per acre—6.9 bushels better than Patterson which had an average comparable yield of 44.6 bushels. Tama in 23 trials averaged 52.4 bushels as compared to Patterson's 44.6. Boone, another new variety also topped standard local oat strains, yielding 48.3 bushels. Beaver produced 46.7 bushels, and Cornelian 47.1 bushels.

Vicland, Tama and Boone produced a high quality of grain, with a higher test weight per bushel than the other varieties. All three are early—8 to 10 days earlier than Patterson.

All three of the new varieties are short strawed and resistant to lodging, but not suitable for hay. Being early, short-strawed, and resistant to lodging, they are recommended by extension agronomists as "excellent companion crops" for grass and legume seedings. Where the trials were conducted, stands of clover and alfalfa were much better when seeded in these varieties than when seeded with a later and taller kind of oats which is likely to lodge.

Other conclusions reached by extension agronomists as a result of these demonstrations are that "Patterson and Cornelian oats are desirable where lots of straw is wanted, but cannot be expected to yield as consistently high as the newer varieties. Beaver has yielded somewhat above the average, but its biggest handicap are a weak straw and a tough awn."

Canadian clipped oats, feed oats suitable for seed, and other unknown varieties yield below the average and should not be used for seed. Buy known varieties of proved merit; do not gamble on untried, nondescript seed.

PENN STATE HOLSTEINS ARE TESTED FOR TYPE

Officials of the Holstein-Friesian Association of America recently inspected and classified for type, the Holstein herd at the Pennsylvania State College. Thomas E. Elder, one of eight association officers, was in charge of the inspection.

Among animals in the Penn State herd, six were classified as "very good," second highest score an animal can receive. Twelve others were designated as "good plus."

The type classification, combined with a production testing program, is used as means of proving sires and locating outstanding brood cow families in the nation's best herds.

Random Items

must build their homes substantially to keep out cold weather, must furnish themselves and their families with heavy clothing and footwear for the winter months, and must provide seats of bedding. Gardens lie idle the greater part of every year because things won't grow in frozen ground. Cars, too, must be given shelter from winter blasts, must be protected against freezing, and the lubrication must be changed twice a year to accommodate the changes in weather. People who live here spend virtually half their lives indoors, because the weather outside is fit neither for man nor beast. Maybe most persons are just like ourselves. We don't like winter weather, but we can't do anything about it, and anyway we've never lived in any other climate. Perhaps those in Florida, or in California, secretly wish they'd get a chance to shiver, or to throw a snow ball once in a while.

MAKE OVER PARTLY WORN CLOTHING FOR CHILDREN

Shortages of cotton clothing and yard goods continue. Many stores have no stock of cotton goods and others have limited stocks, so homemakers can expect to find little cotton when they are ready to do their spring sewing.

Huge demands for cotton articles used by the armed forces, large shipments of cotton for lend-lease and good neighbor shipments, and labor and loom shortages, are the major causes of the cotton shortage, reports Miss Helen S. Butler, home economics extension representative for Centre County.

Butter Economy

Bring one-half cupful of good milk to a boil, then set aside to cool. When just lukewarm, add 1/4-pound of unmelting butter and beat with eggbeater until mixture is thick and creamy. Put in icebox to harden.

FARM CALENDAR

Timely Reminders from The Pennsylvania State College School of Agriculture

Oat Yields Improved—Three recently developed oat varieties—Vicland, Tama and Boone—surpassed standard varieties in yield in demonstrations conducted last summer on Pennsylvania farms under supervision of extension agronomists of the Pennsylvania State College. Of the three, Vicland gave the best performance. Seed is now available.

Potato Disease Spreading—Ring rot, highly infectious potato disease, is spreading to new areas each year. Plant pathologists at the Pennsylvania State College urge planting only disease-free seed and the disinfecting of all utensils and equipment used in planting, including containers, gloves and knives.

Ewes Need Attention—Light grain feed, such as oats and corn, together with bran and good roughage, will help build up underweight ewes in winter quarters, points out William B. Connell, extension livestock specialist at the Pennsylvania State College.

Dairy Herds Improved—Bull Associations in Pennsylvania have produced 6,587 sons and 7,336 females for the development and improvement of herds, reports R. R. Welch, extension dairy specialist at Penn State.

Mulch Strawberries—Much may still be applied to strawberry plants to good advantage—even with snow on the ground, report extension fruit specialists at the Pennsylvania State College. Wheat straw is best.

Keep Best Cows—If feed supplies shrink, dairymen may find it more profitable to cull their herd than buy feed—keeping the best producers, remind extension dairy specialists at Penn State.

Vegetable Short Course—Pennsylvania State College School of Agriculture will conduct a vegetable plant short course January 24-25.

Engagement Announced
Mr. and Mrs. Robert Rishel of Leont, announce the engagement of their daughter, Pauline D., to Cpl. Lamar H. Valmont, AAF, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Valmont of State College. Cpl. Calmont, a radio operator on a B-29, is stationed at Great Bend, Kan. No date has been set for the wedding.

The Sixth War Bond drive was a great success but if you want the war to be a success keep on buying bonds every month.

"I HAVE RETURNED..."

ALL AMERICA was thrilled when General Douglas MacArthur first set foot on Philippine soil. We now know from the long and desperate enemy resistance on Leyte and Mindoro that victory is still far away.

It is a long, hard road that leads to Tokyo. That is why re-conversion plans have been put back on the shelf and war production schedules speeded up.

PULWOOD SHORTAGE ACUTE

One of the most needed materials right now is pulwood. Vast convoys loaded with all kinds of supplies must go quickly to MacArthur's men. All of this material calls for double packaging to protect it during the long ocean voyage and under tropical jungle conditions. Military demands for pulwood are higher than ever before.

BACK MacARTHUR

While MacArthur and his men are fighting their way foot by foot through the Philippines, you can help them by cutting every cord of pulwood you possibly can. Don't let their task be harder because they lack ammunition, food or medical supplies.
