D., followed by further services at the Pilgrim Holiness church of Sugar Valley, Rev. J. A. Slimmer will officiate.

Woman Is Found Dead In Home

Centre County Coroner Charles Sheekler of Milesburg, after conducting an investigation, said death had resulted from natural causes.

Mrs. Hackenberg was a daughter of Elias and Catherine Rupp Breen and was born in Gregg township. Her husband, Wesley J. Hackenberg, preceded her in death. Surviving children are: Mrs. Charles F. Catherman, of Altoona; Mrs. Russell Zacharias, of Allentown, and Harold Hackenberg, of Muncy. Also surviving are a sister and three brothers: Mrs. Emma Sheehan, of Rochester, N. Y.; Myles Breen, of Rebersburg; George Breen, of Ogden, Utah, and Ezra Breen, of Akron, Ohio; and these grandchildren: L. C. W. Catherman, of Victoria, Texas; Harold Catherman, of Altoona, and Joanne Catherman, of Muncy.

Funeral services were held at the home on Monday morning, followed by services in the Rebersburg Reformed church, of which Mrs. Hackenberg was a member. Rev. Glenn Weaver was in charge and interment was made in the Rebersburg cemetery.

Strangely enough, one of Mrs. Hackenberg's last published poems was a humorous little verse entitled "The Frozen Bathroom," in which the author charged winter with having thrice in one week frozen up the bathroom fixtures. The poem, published in the March 1, 1945 issue of The Centre Democrat, is reprinted as follows:

Old winter, now I've always loved you,
With your snow-capped hills and trees;
But our friendship here we'll never see,
If you let our bathroom freeze.

Thrice this week you've been so cruel,
Which to me was quite a strain;
When you stuck those icy fingers
Right down through that leaden drain.

So let this be the last time,
Or to Southlands we shall go;
To the land of warmth and sunshine,
Where there is no ice or snow.

There to bask in the ocean's breeze,
Where the bathrooms never freeze.
