Battle To End—

complaint against B B guns. The Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to animals has cited cases of dogs, cats and birds injured almost daily by the weapons.
Damage to window panes and destruction to light globes are additional reasons advanced in support of the ban.
The provisions against sale of air rifles and similar weapons, including sling shots, extend for the most part to persons under 16 years of age. Prohibition of their use would apply to everyone.
One measure includes a provision that, whenever violation of the act results in injury, the magistrate or justice of the peace may assign as much of the $300 maximum fine as necessary for medical payments.
Bills introduced in 1949 by Pittsburgh and Philadelphia legislators to outlaw the manufacture or sale of any air-rifle, B B gun or similar instrumentality died in committee. Sentiment against the guns was not as strong two years ago, however, as it is now.

Know Your—

visited museum in New York City. It is at 29 East 4th St., and is maintained by the Historic Landmark Society.

Built in the early 1830's, it was lived in by members of one family from 1835 to 1933 when the last survivor died at the age of 93 in the same room and same bed in which she had been born. Apparently she never accepted the 20th Century but became more and more a recluse, allowing nothing to be changed in the house and preserving everything that had been there in her girlhood. Consequently it was a comparatively simple matter to restore the house and arrange its contents in keeping with the year, 1835.

The interior shown here is characteristic of the architecture and furnishings in favor then. Other parlor furniture not shown in this view includes two Sheraton tables of the Directoire period, one a drop-leaf center table with paw feet, the other a tilt-top candlestand and an early Victorian armchair with finger-molding, cabriole front legs and carved cresting characteristics of the French influence.

Sofa and side chair are pure American Empire as are the chairs, table, sideboard, etc., to be seen through the Doric-columned doorway. This black room was originally a back parlor, an arrangement common to 19th Century city houses but in 1863 was converted into a dining room. The Victorian carpet dates about that time also. These represent some of the slight changes made by the head of the family who died in the 1870's.

Indeed the house and its furnishings reflect the life pattern of a man of substance and good balance. He bought this new house in 1835, furnished it largely with the furniture in style at the time, but he also kept a good amount of what he already possessed. Sheraton chairs and other items. They are on the second floor.

play in the floor exhibit cases of the College Library.
Graham's collection of photographs includes pictures of pilots who flew out of Bellefonte and who were noted in early aviation history, such as L. W. Bertaud and J. D. Hill who were lost at sea in an unsuccessful attempt in 1927 to fly from New York to Rome; Paul F. Collins, early round-the-world pilot who crashed in the Grand Canyon on the last lap of his flight; D. C. Smith, who accompanied Admiral Byrd on his polar expeditions, and others.

Scenes of crashes which helped give this area the name "Graveyard of the Alleghenies" are in the exhibit, as well as views of Bellefonte's first airport just east of the town on the Tom Beaver farm, and the present airport between Pleasant Gap and Zion.

The post office department inaugurated air mail service on May 15, 1918 and in 1925 night flying was started. In 1927 the postal service awarded air mail carrying contracts to commercial companies and use of the Bellefonte field was discontinued when other routes were put into operation.

Prince Farrington—

hills, hauling it out in trucks after dark. Other bootleggers, knowing that people preferred the Farrington product, would peddle their wares under his name.
Centre Countians who recall the prohibition days recount how an elaborate system of light signals heralded a truck consignment of whiskey shipped from the eastern Centre, and Clinton county hills. It eventually found its way to every part of the county.

Mrs. George Porter, Jersey Shore, who was in court when her father appeared, later told reporters her father would not go to the penitentiary immediately Farrington, when apprehended Mar. 13, in the undergrowth near Appoka, Fla., was suffering arthritis, diabetes and gangrene of both feet.
His family appealed to the court to place Farrington on probation so that they could take care of him.
Farrington, according to Clinton County tax records, lived in Greene Township from 1920 to 1926. He then moved to a house across the Susquehanna east of Jersey Shore. In the three counties he used to load a truck with food and clothing which he distributed among the needy. It was explained in court the reason he did not pay revenue taxes was because of these acts of charity.

He was broke at the time of his arrest, living in a tent and supporting himself by odd jobs. When the FBI announced his arrest after a three year hunt, friends in Pennsylvania and North Carolina began circulating petitions.
