when PROTECTION counts

Sometimes people see the need for protection only when it's too late. Locking the barn door after the horse has been stolen is an age-old fable of futility.

All of us guard against dangers that appear imminent. Threat of flood drives us to building levees, piling sandbags. But too often the inevitable dangers that threaten our families' security are disregarded or forgotten.

For most of us the only real guarantee of the future security of our families is life insurance. Why not examine your own situation? Are your wife and children protected—or are you taking the risk of waiting until it's too late?
