Herds Of Swine Are Vulnerable

Disease May Cause Losses to Farmers

Veterinary authorities express fear that a previously rare swine disease called infectious atrophic rhinitis may cause heavy losses to many farmers in 1951.

The American Foundation for Animal Health reports that the disease continues on the increase following serious outbreaks last year. "Infectious rhinitis does not kill many animals outright," the foundation says, "but it may stop gains to the point where hog raising is no longer profitable. Affected pigs fail to put on weight."

"Diseased baby pigs sneeze frequently and their snouts later become 'pushed in' or twisted due to shrinkage of the bones of the nose. Scours, unthriftiness and pneumonia may follow."

"In many instances farmers have mistaken infectious rhinitis for 'bull nose.' The two conditions appear alike, but bull nose starts from an injury and infection with barnyard germs. It is not contagious. However, infectious rhinitis is caused by an unknown spreading agent, which stays in the herd season after season. It is very contagious."

"Careless buying of breeding stock and feeder pigs is an important factor in spreading the disease to clean premises. Once on a farm, the entire herd may have to be disposed of to rid the farms of the disease."

The foundation suggests that if owners suspect infectious rhinitis, they should get an immediate veterinary diagnosis. Prompt control measures must be applied if losses are to be held down this season.

Dust Young Lambs To Destroy Ticks

Young lambs soon become infested with sheep ticks, if the ewes are infested. To keep the lambs growing and gaining at a good normal rate, the ticks must be killed off with a dust, states County Agent L. H. Bull.

Dust all lambs as soon as they show any signs of ticks, with a 2 per cent rotenone dust. If a 2 per cent rotenone dust is not available get a 4 to 5 per cent rotenone powder and dilute it with two parts (by weight) of dry wettable sulphur.

Lambs can be treated individually by sifting the dust on them with a salt shaker-type of can, or they can be crowded into a small enclosure where a large number can be treated at the same time by blowing the dust into their fleece with a hand duster.

When the weather warms up and after shearing, the entire flock should be dipped or sprayed before they go on summer range. Use one-half pound of 4 to 5 per cent rotenone to 100 gallons of water for either a dip or spray.

Fungus Attacks Dogwood Trees

Dept. of Forests & Waters Urges Alert

State Foresters of the Department of Forests and Waters have been alerted to watch for two fungus diseases which attack and destroy dogwood trees.

Particular alertness is being stressed in the Valley Forge Park area where over 50,000 dogwoods of several varieties add to the beauty of this popular historical shrine. The dogwood trees gracing General George Washington's Revolutionary Headquarters are expected to bloom around the middle of May.

The Department's Division of Forest Research reports that two diseases caused by fungi (Elsinoe corni and Ascochyta cornicola) reached major proportions in several South-eastern States last year, resulting in considerable damage to trees in Virginia, Georgia, Maryland and North Carolina were subjected to attacks on the leaves and twigs which often cause complete withering of the leaves.

Fortunately, Pennsylvania State Foresters report that neither of the fungus diseases has made an appearance in this area. Department officials, however, are preparing for the possibility of the diseases appearing and spreading from other States to this Commonwealth.

A recommended control for these blights involves spraying the dogwood trees before they bloom with fungicides.

H. S. Grads Eligible For Army Program

Graduates and senior class members of the local high school may participate in the U. S. Army's Technical School program, T/Sgt. William S. Nagle, announces.

The program offers the qualified high school graduate an opportunity to secure an assignment to a U. S. Army technical school of his choice. The current list of schools participating in this program number 23 in such fields as: administrative, clerical, engineer and mechanical, map reproduction, medical technician's training, and many others.

Graduates are required to complete a mental test at the local recruiting station, and provide a record of school studies for use by the training command that approves final selections.

The local recruiter further explained that through this plan senior students can plan their future upon graduation, as well as men who have already secured the high school diploma. The school assignment, secured before the graduate enlists, commences after enlistment in the Army and completion of basic training.

For further details, including school catalogs and qualifications, Sgt. Nagle encourages district high school graduates to contact his office in the Bush Arcade building, Bellefonte.

Wait Year Before Cutting Asparagus

During the first season after you plant asparagus, no cutting should be made and only light cuttings during the second year, reminds Asst. County Agent Clair D. DeLong.

"Since a planting properly cared for, should last 20 years or more, it pays to develop strong, healthy plants before heavy cuttings begin. During the harvest period, all the stems, regardless of size, should be cut off at the ground before they show signs of branching. Otherwise, the buds or crowns beneath the surface fail to develop a continuous supply of new stems. When stems begin to get thin, it shows the cutting season for such plants should plants should cease and that they should be permitted to grow."
