Two Killed—

Dr. Replogle and his deputy, Edgar G. Walls, who were at the scene, said the two men who were killed were employed as "cookers" and were the two on each 9-hour trick, tending the digesters.

The digesters, 16 feet in diameter and 24 feet high, are metal and stand on end. Wood chips are put in acid solution and cook six hours.

The limestone building is 60 feet high and the body of one man was blown upward and through the roof across the boiler house and fell on the west side of the building in a debris littered area.

Escaping chlorine gas hindered rescuers, and Altoona police secured gas masks from the city fire department and resuscitators to the scene, where it was first reported that 15 men were trapped in the building.

Lights were blown out in the town and the Roaring Spring Friendship Fire Company, and Martinsburg firemen brought portable lighting systems to aid.

Penelec and Bell employees were rushed to the area to make repairs. The main transformer was blown out in Roaring Spring and temporary repairs gave partial light for streets within seven minutes.

One worker said: "It was like lightning and thunder. Fire flashed out like lightning. It must have been the wires burning. It came at us in sheets. Then there was a roar. Next there was darkness and a shower of debris pouring all around us."

A car, parked near where the three men were had the roof caved in and the glass was shattered. A large 12 foot steel railroad tie was found on the highway 300 feet from the building where the explosion occurred. Houses were shaken throughout the town.

Mill officials said all of the plant's 340 employees are being used to rebuild the plant immediately.

When the Rev. D. M. Kniseley, whose home is across the highway from the plant, returned to his home from services in Altoona on Thursday night, he found a 9 by 5 foot beam on his porch roof.

Spokesmen for WFBG said this week that Gable's has everything completed and needs only the nod of the Federal commission to go on the air. The building is completed, necessary electric equipment has been tested, and the management is doing all it can to hasten the opening of its regular operations.

Socialism Peril Told To Group

Penn Stater Warns Conference on Trend

Every human and physical resources is at hand to keep America strong and prosperous, but the nation stands at the crossroads between traditional free enterprise and socialism, the Industrial and Community Development Conference was told recently at its gathering in Hotel Hershey.

Dr. C. S. Wyand, assistant to the president of the Pennsylvania State College, declared that "America is still a nation where individual initiative and private enterprise is relied upon" to get things done.

"I believe, however," he asserted, "that we are now teetering between the maintenance of the American tradition of free enterprise, and the full-fledged development of socialism. What we do during the next few years, who does it, and how it is done, will have a decisive effect on the sort of political economy we leave to our children."

Approximately 160 civic leaders, businessmen, educators, bankers, professional men, public officials and chamber of commerce executives from seven Central Pennsylvania counties attended the meeting, sponsored by the Pennsylvania Power and Light Company.
