Know Your—

(Continued From Page One) this company until the pottery changed hands in the late 1940's then went to Bennington, Vermont, where he designed several items which also rank as collectibles today. Later he went to East Liverpool, Ohio, where he made designs suited to Rockingham ware.

His designs were copied by other potters located all the way from Vermont to Illinois. It is estimated there must have been at least eighty such potteries making Rockingham ware in the United States during the years of its favor. The height of this American-made Rockingham was about 1840 to 1870. After that quality and workmanship deteriorated.

For design and shaping of these pitchers Greatback was largely responsible either directly or indirectly since he trained several other designers during his years at the American Pottery Company. Among these were James Carr who later went to the Congress Pottery at South Amboy, N.J.; James Coxon, designer for the Bennett Pottery, Baltimore, Maryland, and William Bloor, of East Liverpool, Ohio.

Lease Area—

(Continued From Page One) One oil company claimed that the land was suitable for four wells. The geologist who examined the land picked the berry patch by the spring for the first well. Mrs. Scarborough herself claims that there is oil seepage from the land at the side of the hill, which she especially notices in August. On top of the hill, where the white sand is found, she has often picked up sea shells.

Winner and Murphy, who are now assembling the rig to drill the Johnny Springer, which is a mile distant, plan soon to drill the Scarborough tract. Recently a $25,000 bid for the lease of a 46 acre tract one mile from the Scarborough property was rejected. The Scarborough tract is the last large acreage to be leased on the anticline axis, exclusive of state land.

weight and importance to some of the aspects of rural life. We believe that it was unduly impressed by the lack of modern bathroom facilities in the home of the great-grandfather.

The majority opinion held that the child welfare representatives, neighbors and the minister of the church in Shawville "all testified concerning the neat condition of the great-grandfather's home, the favorable environment and his good reputation and standing in the community."

Justice Chidsey also observed that the boy receives spiritual guidance from Cowher and attends Sunday School regularly. No evidence was presented, the court observed to show the fitness of the Arizona home. Chidsey added that the court felt it was best to leave the child in familiar surroundings rather than permit him to be taken to Arizona and live with "strangers" in an unfamiliar environment.

The majority opinion also took into account that the child's father also lives with Cowher. Justice Bell declared in the dissenting opinion that the majority ruling, "according to all human experience, is directly contrary to the best interests and welfare of the young child."

"There is no love like a mother's love," Justice Bell declared. "Nothing can take its place—certainly not a great-grandfather."

"A great-grandfather has neither the strength nor the patience nor the qualities to give a child the care and attention and devotion which a mother showers on her child."

"The majority opinion blindly or blandly ignores the principles laid down in the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States with respect to full faith and credit."

Justice Bell warned that under the majority ruling the child would become a "shuttlecock," with interminable litigation and growing disrespect for the courts.

"All the mother has to do," he wrote, "is retain the child when he comes to her for a weekend or to kidnap the child, thus necessitating a new habeas corpus proceeding by his great-grandfather in another county in Pennsylvania, or in another state, where a different judge can make a diametrically opposed award based on the same facts, circumstances and conditions."

"The fact that the mother is a practical nurse and that the great-grandfather is on relief, and that the child is living in a home without any of the modern necessities of life, furnishes strong additional reasons why this young child should be with his mother."

"The decision of the learned trial judge seems to have been too strongly influenced by his natural pride in the fine country of Clearfield and its fine citizens."

Tells Court Wife—

Stewart, who may not be able to be at the trial now set for September, testified he accompanied Pluebell to the hospital where he died. He declares that the man repeated about eight times this statement: "Don't blame my wife. It wasn't her fault."

view to affording the downriver communities flood control without striking industry a death blow by authorizing a hydro-electric power plant such as is contemplated at the Keating dam.

The resolution also noted the railroad relocation which would be required if the Keating dam is constructed, and said the proposed "giant dam at Keating" would "otherwise disrupt all community activities." It further objected to the "debt of 191 million dollars on the taxpayers in a power-making venture, the returns from which are simply estimates and visionary."

The people at the meeting included representatives of Lumber City, a community which would be affected by the proposed flood control dam at Curwensville; and Howard, where protests are being organized against a proposed flood control dam at Blanchard.

George Denton of State College, spoke for the Howard group. He told the meeting that, although Lock Haven has a flood every year or so, the people down there keep sending over to State College for oil stoves for emergency use, adding that he thought by this time, they would have bought their own oil stoves.

The effect of relocating the New York Central Railroad tracks which now run through the area which would be covered by the permanent reservoir of the Keating dam, was discussed by spokesmen for the railroad and for coal interests in that region.

A. B. Bloom, chief engineer of the Clearfield Bituminous Coal Corp., H. B. Tucker, of Jersey Shore, division superintendent of the railroad; G. S. Woodling, Jersey Shore, assistant division engineer; T. J. McCarthy, Indiana, vice president and operating head of the CBC corporation, and Robert T. Liang, Altoona, executive director of the Central Pennsylvania Coal Operators Association, discussed the railroad problem.

Bloom said the dam as originally designed would back up water to Clearfield. He listed 32 operations, 32 deep mines and 24 strip mines between Clearfield and Maurey that he said would be affected by the proposed relocation of the railroad. He said some operators beyond Maurey would have to truck their coal 25 miles to the nearest railroad.

Bloom also estimated that there are 95 million tons of coal in seams 20 inches or higher in the area that would be flooded.

Woodling said the change might increase the operating costs of the railroad over the relocated line by $1,341,000 annually, because of the steeper grades.

McCarthy pointed out that the only hydro-electric dam now in central Pennsylvania is at Clarion, where low water in the summer requires a supplementary steam plant to maintain a proper flow of current.

Cut Hay At Right Stage Of Maturity

To get the maximum of total digestible nutrients from hay, cut it at the right stage of maturity, advises County Agent L. H. Bull. That means cutting red clover at 30 per cent bloom, alfalfa at 10 per cent bloom, and alsike and ladino clover and birdsfoot trefoil at full bloom.

Cut grasses as they are heading, just before bloom. And if there is mixed growth observe the right time to cut for the specie that predominates.

"Some day I'm going to own a Roadmaster"

ONE thing that interests us mightily is the fact that so many people are stepping up, when they buy automobiles. We've been looking at surveys, and it seems that just about everyone wants a better car than the one he's now driving. So we know how you feel, and we'd like to help you make your dreams come true. We'd like you to discover how fine a fine car can be. We'd like you to stretch out in the room of a ROADMASTER—feel the luxury of its double-depth cushions—stroke the fine texture of its fabrics. We'd like you to know the proud levelness of its coil-spring cushioned ride—as well as its gentle obedience to your hand on the wheel. We'd like to show you the many extras this custom-built Buick provides—at no extra charge when we come to make out a bill of sale. But above all, we'd like you to experience two thrills found exclusively in ROADMASTERS. One is the smooth might of its Fireball Engine. The other is the supreme simplicity of Dynaflo Drive, which is, incidentally, one of the many features included in the price. We try to hold down our enthusiasm in talking about this masterful beauty. We might claim—you'll find more room—more comfort—more luxury—a smoother ride—more conveniences—more thrill in a ROADMASTER than in any other car in the fine-car field. But why spoil the thrill of discovery? Come find out for yourself how completely a 1951 ROADMASTER fulfills the dreams of the car you hope sometime to own. And let us whisper something to you: The cost of making this step to ROADMASTER ownership is less than most people believe.
