But almost every day, for a few moments, saddles are stripped off and then the cadet, girl with saber and revolver perhaps, goes back to first principles and bareback. Then it is that one sees the strong points of our school of riding, for the cadet is expected and required to accomplish, without the aid of saddle or stirrup, everything he can do without them.

There are men, however, who never on earth can be taught to ride either gracefully or well. There are graduates of the Military Academy who are almost always of the kind who are charged with the duty of putting them in the saddle, and who are obliged to acquiesce in an easy or a secure seat.
