

COMMERCIAL NOTES.

Situation and Outlook of Leading Jobbing Industries.

REVIVAL OF TRADE NEAR AT HAND

The Winter's Record in Produce, Groceries and Cereal Lines.

DRUMMERS REPORT A BRIGHT OUTLOOK.

OFFICE OF THE PITTSBURGH DISPATCH, Tuesday, January 29, 1889.

Industrial items of interest were probably never more difficult to gather than for a day or two past.

The first month of the year approaches its goal with a record by no means satisfactory to operators in cereals and country produce.

Markets in both lines have been sluggish all the month, with a general drift toward lower prices.

In grocery lines business has been fairly active, but prices of leading staples have shown a tendency to ease.

Traders generally report January collections as slow. About the best-abused commodity of the season has been the weather, which has knocked out many a nice plan and dollar by reason of its moderating influence.

Winter's second month is virtually gone with an average temperature not above autumn weather.

The better flaxseed. The corner in creamery butter inaugurated in November was about the most lamentable failure of commercial history.

For a week or so Elgin butter climbed up into forty at headquarters.

Grain and hay have been coming to market in quantities beyond demand.

According to former experience the winter of our trade discontent must be nearly at its end.

Another crumb of comfort is found in the fact that commercial travelers report the situation brighter here in most lines.

"There is a fortune here for some enterprising fellow," remarked a business man to the DISPATCH representative on the cars.

"You have probably noticed these hill-sides hundreds of times without a thought of their value," he continued.

"Yes," was the answer, "and have often wished they were in Halifax or some other remote region."

"I fail to catch the force of your statement," was the rejoinder.

"Goads" his tone showed the deep disgust which the word excited.
