

A SPLIT PATCHED UP,
But So Clumsily That Its Seams May be Readily Seen of All Men.

PROOF OF PARTY JEALOUSIES.

Narrow Escape of Young Emperor William
From Death by Drowning.

HIS FIFTY FOR THE POISON SUFFERERS.

The patch in the Tory garments over Birmingham is a clumsy one and doesn't deceive many. All the elements for a big explosion are to be found in the Tory-Unionist circle. A three-cornered fight in Birmingham would have pleased Gladstone too well. Hence it was avoided. While crossing a swollen river in Posen, the young Emperor of Germany narrowly escaped being drowned. Italy makes a cautious bid for the acquisition of Abyssinia.

LONDON, April 6.—[Copyright.]—The Tory split at Birmingham has been patched up, but so clumsily that the ragged seams may be seen of all men. Never since the Tory-Unionist alliance was established, over two years ago, have the Tories been subjected to such humiliations as have been heaped upon them this week. They were expelled, by the rules of arithmetic and by a formal although unrecorded agreement, from the reversion of John Bright's seat. They believed themselves strong enough to win it in a fair fight with the Gladstonians, with or without the aid of the Unionists, and Joseph Chamberlain was understood to have their claims, but when the time for action came and they announced that they were going to run Randolph Churchill, that settled the matter.

LONDON, April 6.—[Copyright.]—The Tory split at Birmingham has been patched up, but so clumsily that the ragged seams may be seen of all men. Never since the Tory-Unionist alliance was established, over two years ago, have the Tories been subjected to such humiliations as have been heaped upon them this week. They were expelled, by the rules of arithmetic and by a formal although unrecorded agreement, from the reversion of John Bright's seat. They believed themselves strong enough to win it in a fair fight with the Gladstonians, with or without the aid of the Unionists, and Joseph Chamberlain was understood to have their claims, but when the time for action came and they announced that they were going to run Randolph Churchill, that settled the matter.

HE BROOKS NO RIVAL.
Chamberlain claims to be the lord of Birmingham and will brook no rival near his throne. By his orders, John Albert Bright was put forward as the Unionist candidate, and the Government was informed that its choice lay between the surrender of Birmingham by the Tories or the disruption of the Unionist alliance. Churchill was built and badgered into refusing Birmingham's invitation and after a week of warfare fled into the country to avoid the way of the contending factions. The local Tories, less amenable to official pressure, swore by all their gods that they would not be defeated, and finally the mutiny became so serious that the Government had recourse to the desperate measure of sending to Birmingham Balfour, the master of coercion.

Balfour addressed the Tory council last night, and in terms of passionate earnestness adjured them, if they did not wish to ruin the Empire, to accept the Unionist candidate. The meeting was of the stormiest character, and Chamberlain was received with derisive howls, and for a while even Balfour, the darling of the Tory party, was unable to obtain a hearing, but in the end Balfour prevailed, and by a small majority the meeting grudgingly agreed not to run a conservative candidate.

POSITIVE PROOF OF JEALOUSY.
It is necessary to refer to this local squabble in some length, because it affords proof of what has long been suspected, that the heart-burnings and personal jealousies seriously attended the coalition of Tories and Unionists had each their own dangerous foe within the Tory-Unionist inner circle, and that all the elements for a big explosion are ready to hand. When a Tory tube agent, Joseph Chamberlain, there is always dangerous friction, and the next time it is not improbable that the squabbles will reach a point where a pyrotechnic display gladdening the eyes of the friends of Ireland.

Nothing would have pleased better the Grand Old Man than to have had a three-cornered fight on Central Birmingham. He has maintained, and the Tories and Unionists have proved incontrovertibly, and the knowledge of that fact is one of the chief reasons for the bitter anguish and humiliation of the local Tories.

AN EMPEROR ALMOST DROWNED.
The young Kaiser Wilhelm has a narrow escape from a watery grave.

LONDON, April 6.—Early in the visit to Posen, where the floods have again risen and rendered thousands of people homeless. The long accounts of the Emperor's visit there, which are published by the English papers, omit the most interesting of his doings. This energetic young Emperor had to cross the river Vistula, but all the bridges had been carried away by the floods. He therefore started over on a barge. The barge collided with a mass of floating debris, and was in imminent danger of sinking. The Emperor and his suite were therefore transferred to another barge, but in the act of transferring he slipped and narrowly escaped falling into the water. When he landed on the opposite bank he sighted a passing military commissariat wagon and immediately rode away, to the thorough surprise of the garrison, whether the wagon was bound. During the whole of his visit the Emperor varied his visits to the sufferers with surprise to the garrisons at unearthly hours of the night and morning.

I learn to-day, by a telegram from Berlin, that the Emperor has subscribed 20,000 marks toward the relief of the sufferers by the inundation in Posen. On Wednesday he waited at a Berlin railway station for his mother and her three daughters and received them with a greater show of cordiality than might have been expected.

BLOODY, BUT BUSINESSLIKE.
Italy Makes a Careful Bid for the Acquisition of Abyssinia.

LONDON, April 6.—Your Rome correspondent telegraphs that Italy is cautiously sounding the Powers as to how they would regard an Italian protectorate of Abyssinia. Since the death of King John, the Abyssinians have been actively engaged in the national recreation of cutting each other's throats. The Italians claim that their methods of pacification, although possibly involving some blood letting, are less unpleasant and more expeditious.

Speaking Only Good of the Dying.
LONDON, April 6.—The death of the King of the Netherlands is expected almost momentarily. London newspapers think the moment opportune for the remark that he was the most gallant of men, the most constitutional of rulers and the worst of husbands.

Business Better Than Speculation.
LONDON, April 6.—A company has been formed for lighting 50 miles of London streets with electricity, while the promoters of the default coal syndicate have lost about $30,000, and the tin plate men are poorer by about $80,000.

SOME ODDS AND ENDS.

Perthshire Paragon, Personal or Peculiar, Presumably a London Man.
LONDON, April 6.—Mr. George L. Rives and his young wife have arrived in London and are enjoying themselves heartily.

The Foreign Office has received a notification that Lieutenant R. H. Buckingham has assumed the duties of naval attaché at the American Legation.

The former Benites sailed in the Servia to-day, in the custody of Sergeant MacLucky, of New York. Police Sergeant Gummer, of Scotland Yard, kept his eye upon both the prisoner and his guard as far as Queensferry. The British police have taken a tender interest in Benites since the lawyers commenced to fight over him, and the final granting of the extradition was regarded almost as a triumph for Scotland Yard.

Since the terrible news from Samoa the Legation here has had numerous inquiries from friends and relatives of the officers and men in the wrecked ships. Strange to say, the Legation has had to obtain all its information from the British newspapers, and our Navy Department would have saved many headaches by calling lists of the saved and lost.

Commander Chadwick sailed for New York Thursday. He leaves behind a number of naval members of the United Service and Naval and Military clubs say he was a good fellow and a capable officer.

The police have arrested the right man for the burglary at Secretary White's house, but Mrs. White is as far as ever from recovering her property.

It is announced that Cornelius Vanderbilt will take possession of the Herbert house, Belgrave Square, next week, for the season.

Mrs. Mackay entertained the Prince of Wales at her town house last Wednesday, and started for the country the next day to recover from the strain.

There is talk here of a new shilling illustrated weekly magazine, designed to knock John Bright and the Tory party out of the British market. The attempt is not likely to succeed.

John Bright has left a big sum of money for distribution among his relations. The total is variously estimated at from a quarter to three quarters of a million sterling.

SANDRINGHAM TOO SMALL.

The Family of the Prince of Wales Crowded for Room.
LONDON, April 6.—Unless her arrangements be upset by the death of the Duchess of Cambridge, the Queen will pay a visit to the Prince of Wales at Sandringham, at Easter, and great preparations are being made for her reception. Sandringham, considering the size of the Prince's household, is hard pushed for room, but there are many visitors, but the Prince must find better accommodations for his royal household, who exacts as much homage from her children as from her ordinary subjects.
