

LATEST AND FULLEST ACCOUNTS

OF THE

Johnstown Disaster

Will be found in this and the following issues of The Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Which has a corps of staff correspondents and artists located at the scene.

The Dispatch

ESTABLISHED FEBRUARY 8, 1846.

Vol. 61, No. 118.—Entered as Second-Class Matter, November 11, 1879, at Postoffice at Pittsburgh, Pa., under No. 1077.

Business Office—77 and 80 Fifth Avenue. News Rooms and Publishing House—75, 77 and 79 Diamond Street.

Average circulation of the daily edition of The Dispatch for six months ending June 1, 1896.

27,824

Average circulation of the Sunday edition of The Dispatch for May, 1896.

47,468

Copies per issue.

TERMS OF THE DISPATCH.

POSTAGE FREE IN THE UNITED STATES.

DAILY DISPATCH, ONE YEAR, $3.00

DAILY DISPATCH, SIX MONTHS, $1.50

DAILY DISPATCH, INCLUDING SUNDAY, $3.00

DAILY DISPATCH, INCLUDING SUNDAY, $1.50

POSTAGE FREE IN THE UNITED STATES.

DAILY DISPATCH, ONE YEAR, $3.00

DAILY DISPATCH, SIX MONTHS, $1.50

DAILY DISPATCH, INCLUDING SUNDAY, $3.00

DAILY DISPATCH, INCLUDING SUNDAY, $1.50

POSTAGE FREE IN THE UNITED STATES.

DAILY DISPATCH, ONE YEAR, $3.00

DAILY DISPATCH, SIX MONTHS, $1.50

DAILY DISPATCH, INCLUDING SUNDAY, $3.00

DAILY DISPATCH, INCLUDING SUNDAY, $1.50

POSTAGE FREE IN THE UNITED STATES.

DAILY DISPATCH, ONE YEAR, $3.00

DAILY DISPATCH, SIX MONTHS, $1.50

DAILY DISPATCH, INCLUDING SUNDAY, $3.00

DAILY DISPATCH, INCLUDING SUNDAY, $1.50

POSTAGE FREE IN THE UNITED STATES.

DAILY DISPATCH, ONE YEAR, $3.00

DAILY DISPATCH, SIX MONTHS, $1.50

DAILY DISPATCH, INCLUDING SUNDAY, $3.00

DAILY DISPATCH, INCLUDING SUNDAY, $1.50

is the fact that rapid advances in the price of the iron market, heretofore, have invariably been caused by a sudden and unexpected increase in the demand. This has nearly always been due to a large resumption of railroad building, and to increased expenditures in repairs and equipments after a period of adversity in the railroad business had induced general economy in those departments.

While there has been, of late, a falling off in the railroad demand for iron and steel; and while there is hope that good crops would induce a moderate increase in that department of consumption for our manufacturers, there is no reason to expect such an increase as will produce a rapid and exceptional inflation of values. Indeed, the present situation is such that it is not probable that there is any danger of continued depression amounting to panic, rather than whether there is any probability of a boom in prices. The most satisfactory feature of the present situation, in the iron market at least, is the evident impossibility of either. Prices rest upon such a foundation of bottom rock that any marked decline is impossible as long as it can be, and the capacity for meeting all demands upon it, is so great that it practically certifies that no great expansion can occur. There may be, and all interests will unite in hoping that there will be, a moderate increase in profits and a marked enlargement in the volume of traffic. But unless some new and wholly unexpected factors should intervene, it may be taken as a foregone conclusion that the fluctuations of prices for iron during the next year or two, will be confined within narrow limits.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

THE NEED FOR RELIEF.

Pittsburg is depending promptly and nobly to the needs of the sufferers along the Conemaugh valley for relief from their terrible damage which has been inflicted upon them by the unprecedented flood of Friday. Too much cannot be done in this way. Thousands of people are rendered destitute and homeless, in addition to the unnumbered hundreds whose lives have been destroyed by the terrible outburst of the forces of nature.

The contributions, which have already been made, display an unsurpassed liberality, but there is no danger that additional contributions will exceed the needs of the occasion. The first news from the disaster commenced to count the losses of the homes by acres, and later by hundreds; but it is now evident that they must be counted by thousands, and that the total of people whose homes have been swept away at a single blow is likely to amount up into the tens of thousands. There is no possibility of doing too much to relieve the inevitable suffering from such a disaster. Clothing will be needed, food will be needed, and money will be needed to avert the horrors which will exaggerate the calamity if they are not promptly and abundantly supplied.

The stricken district is naturally a portion of the territory of which Pittsburg is the center, and Pittsburg's response to the relief of the destitute people should be as prompt and unbounded as the terrible and unprecedented nature of the disaster. The estimate of deaths has grown from a few scores at first, to be counted by hundreds and now some estimates state the possibility of as many as five thousand lives are lost.

The fuller reports of the sweeping disaster which are given this morning reveal the existence of horrors that surpass all previous conceptions of what might happen to a city. To the terrors of death by the sudden and devouring floods have been added those of death by fire. The fearful calamity was crowned by the burning of the pile of wreckage thrown up against the railroad bridge across the Conemaugh; and the human wails who had survived being swept away in the floods to be imprisoned in that mass of debris, were doomed to the mockery of death by fire before they had fairly escaped that by water. The combination of the two incongruous and antagonistic elements to produce an appalling and wholesale destruction of life makes the calamity an unequalled one in its fearful attributes.

IT SURPASSES FICTION. A singular feature of the terrible disaster along the Conemaugh river is its almost complete surprise. It is a terrible calamity, and the similar calamity which is told of in Charles Reade's story, "Put Yourself in His Place." The representation of the terrible force of the sudden flood in that work of fiction was considered exaggerated when it was first published. The idea was corrected for Pittsburg readers by the Butcher's Run flood; and the Johnstown disaster reproduces the incidents of the story more exactly. In both cases the suddenness of the disaster is a feature which is not to be forgotten. In both cases the disaster was caused by the sudden bursting of an immense dam lying along the devoted town and forming an enormous reservoir. In reality, as well as in fiction, the calamity was caused by a sudden and unprecedented outpour of rain, and the terrible loss of life in the work of the imagination seems to have been dwarfed by the actual horror of the reality.

IT SURPASSES FICTION. A singular feature of the terrible disaster along the Conemaugh river is its almost complete surprise. It is a terrible calamity, and the similar calamity which is told of in Charles Reade's story, "Put Yourself in His Place." The representation of the terrible force of the sudden flood in that work of fiction was considered exaggerated when it was first published. The idea was corrected for Pittsburg readers by the Butcher's Run flood; and the Johnstown disaster reproduces the incidents of the story more exactly. In both cases the suddenness of the disaster is a feature which is not to be forgotten. In both cases the disaster was caused by the sudden bursting of an immense dam lying along the devoted town and forming an enormous reservoir. In reality, as well as in fiction, the calamity was caused by a sudden and unprecedented outpour of rain, and the terrible loss of life in the work of the imagination seems to have been dwarfed by the actual horror of the reality.

IT SURPASSES FICTION. A singular feature of the terrible disaster along the Conemaugh river is its almost complete surprise. It is a terrible calamity, and the similar calamity which is told of in Charles Reade's story, "Put Yourself in His Place." The representation of the terrible force of the sudden flood in that work of fiction was considered exaggerated when it was first published. The idea was corrected for Pittsburg readers by the Butcher's Run flood; and the Johnstown disaster reproduces the incidents of the story more exactly. In both cases the suddenness of the disaster is a feature which is not to be forgotten. In both cases the disaster was caused by the sudden bursting of an immense dam lying along the devoted town and forming an enormous reservoir. In reality, as well as in fiction, the calamity was caused by a sudden and unprecedented outpour of rain, and the terrible loss of life in the work of the imagination seems to have been dwarfed by the actual horror of the reality.

IT SURPASSES FICTION. A singular feature of the terrible disaster along the Conemaugh river is its almost complete surprise. It is a terrible calamity, and the similar calamity which is told of in Charles Reade's story, "Put Yourself in His Place." The representation of the terrible force of the sudden flood in that work of fiction was considered exaggerated when it was first published. The idea was corrected for Pittsburg readers by the Butcher's Run flood; and the Johnstown disaster reproduces the incidents of the story more exactly. In both cases the suddenness of the disaster is a feature which is not to be forgotten. In both cases the disaster was caused by the sudden bursting of an immense dam lying along the devoted town and forming an enormous reservoir. In reality, as well as in fiction, the calamity was caused by a sudden and unprecedented outpour of rain, and the terrible loss of life in the work of the imagination seems to have been dwarfed by the actual horror of the reality.

IT SURPASSES FICTION. A singular feature of the terrible disaster along the Conemaugh river is its almost complete surprise. It is a terrible calamity, and the similar calamity which is told of in Charles Reade's story, "Put Yourself in His Place." The representation of the terrible force of the sudden flood in that work of fiction was considered exaggerated when it was first published. The idea was corrected for Pittsburg readers by the Butcher's Run flood; and the Johnstown disaster reproduces the incidents of the story more exactly. In both cases the suddenness of the disaster is a feature which is not to be forgotten. In both cases the disaster was caused by the sudden bursting of an immense dam lying along the devoted town and forming an enormous reservoir. In reality, as well as in fiction, the calamity was caused by a sudden and unprecedented outpour of rain, and the terrible loss of life in the work of the imagination seems to have been dwarfed by the actual horror of the reality.

IT SURPASSES FICTION. A singular feature of the terrible disaster along the Conemaugh river is its almost complete surprise. It is a terrible calamity, and the similar calamity which is told of in Charles Reade's story, "Put Yourself in His Place." The representation of the terrible force of the sudden flood in that work of fiction was considered exaggerated when it was first published. The idea was corrected for Pittsburg readers by the Butcher's Run flood; and the Johnstown disaster reproduces the incidents of the story more exactly. In both cases the suddenness of the disaster is a feature which is not to be forgotten. In both cases the disaster was caused by the sudden bursting of an immense dam lying along the devoted town and forming an enormous reservoir. In reality, as well as in fiction, the calamity was caused by a sudden and unprecedented outpour of rain, and the terrible loss of life in the work of the imagination seems to have been dwarfed by the actual horror of the reality.

IT SURPASSES FICTION. A singular feature of the terrible disaster along the Conemaugh river is its almost complete surprise. It is a terrible calamity, and the similar calamity which is told of in Charles Reade's story, "Put Yourself in His Place." The representation of the terrible force of the sudden flood in that work of fiction was considered exaggerated when it was first published. The idea was corrected for Pittsburg readers by the Butcher's Run flood; and the Johnstown disaster reproduces the incidents of the story more exactly. In both cases the suddenness of the disaster is a feature which is not to be forgotten. In both cases the disaster was caused by the sudden bursting of an immense dam lying along the devoted town and forming an enormous reservoir. In reality, as well as in fiction, the calamity was caused by a sudden and unprecedented outpour of rain, and the terrible loss of life in the work of the imagination seems to have been dwarfed by the actual horror of the reality.

THE RIVER'S DARK DRAMA.

Watching the Epilogue of the South Fork Trencher on the Allegheny's Banks.

THEY were turbulent was the Ohio yesterday. It bore upon its ever broadening bosom the fragments of a thousand homes. The gray clouds gave no cheer to the brown water, and they flowed forward, white at the banks and tossing tumultuously together trees, timbers and the wrecks of countless houses thrashed out to kindling wood against bridge and rock in the mad rush of the flood. The sun had set in the west upon a quiet river. It was mighty change that had come in the night. The waters seemed to have a cruel look and the speed of the current suggested forcibly the onset of a murderer from the scenes of his crime.

The terrible news so graphically given in THE DISPATCH yesterday morning seemed all the more appalling when it could be read from the paper to the swollen river. The Ohio has not been higher or uglier for a twelvemonth, and even as early as 9 o'clock yesterday morning it was in a flood of rage. The grim messengers from the scene of destruction, doors, scraps of roofing, window frames, smashed furniture, and here and there some pitiful reminder of a better life, were borne on a cradle or a rocking chair, littered the expanse of water from shore to shore.

The quay and outer wall of the lock at the Bellevue dam were under water, and the only signs of shore were the dam itself lay across the mouth of the river. The water had been in process of building all this winter near the dam, and the water had been in process of building all this winter near the dam, and the water had been in process of building all this winter near the dam.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

THE SOUL OF A HERO.

How a Brave Little Newbury Made His Little's Fortunes.

DESVIER, June 1.—A most interesting story comes from Lowellville, how a few years ago, when the great mining camp was in the pride and glory of its wonderful career, there was employed in one of the largest newspaper offices a young man named Friggle Little. Friggle Little was a boy, whose father had been a hero. No one knew where he spent his nights, but his days were devoted to his duties in the office. He was a quiet, unassuming boy, but his days were devoted to his duties in the office. He was a quiet, unassuming boy, but his days were devoted to his duties in the office.

The terrible news so graphically given in THE DISPATCH yesterday morning seemed all the more appalling when it could be read from the paper to the swollen river. The Ohio has not been higher or uglier for a twelvemonth, and even as early as 9 o'clock yesterday morning it was in a flood of rage. The grim messengers from the scene of destruction, doors, scraps of roofing, window frames, smashed furniture, and here and there some pitiful reminder of a better life, were borne on a cradle or a rocking chair, littered the expanse of water from shore to shore.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

SEWELL'S STRONG GRIP.

The Jersey Senator Held to Have a Powerful Pull on the Administration—A Showed, Silent Politician, and Harrison's Firm Friend—His Political Methods.

NEWTON, N. J., May 31.—Senator William J. Sewell, of this State, has a tremendous grip on the administration. The fact has been recognized here for some time. It is now being recognized at Washington also. There is probably no politician in the United States that stands closer to President Harrison than Mr. Sewell. Stories of their intimacy and of the Jersey Senator's influence with the President have been heard for several months. But only now is the real state of affairs being made known to the public. Sewell is a Republican, and has been an enemy of the ex-Senator, and he has been bitter on his own party, but he has been able to obtain even a village postmaster, Matthew Stanley Quay and James Gilchrist Blaine have not the pull, so far as the signs go, with Harrison that Sewell has. How did it come about?

It began some years ago when Sewell and Harrison were in the same office. Sewell was in the days when the "cold tea" rule was in full force in the Senate restaurant. Nothing spirituous or even malt could be obtained. Sewell was fond of good food and drink, and he was now that he occupies the White House. While the President is temperate in his habits, he is not so in his private life. He is a man who likes a bottle of beer, and occasionally some wine, or possibly a drink of good whisky.

How He Entertained His Private Committee Room. Representing a generous State, and other interests, as the Jersey Senator did, he had a choice stock of liquors at his disposal. He had a choice stock of liquors at his disposal. He had a choice stock of liquors at his disposal. He had a choice stock of liquors at his disposal.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

WICKED INTO CONGRESS.

A Man Who Rose to Fame in Consequence of an Accident.

It is seldom that a man is kicked from a blacksmith shop into the halls of Congress, and from being an illiterate son of toll into a lawyer of the first rank and a broad and liberal statesman, yet such a case is furnished in the history of Indiana. The subject of this sketch, John Quincy Adams, declares to be the latest natural orator in America, and yet he died at the early age of 38. His fame once filled the State, and in the halls of Congress for six years he was recognized as one of the ablest debaters in a body which numbered among its members such men as John Quincy Adams and Stephen A. Douglas, yet his name is now remembered by very few. Such a change does a few years make.

Few even of the politicians of this day remember Andrew Kennedy, yet no man in the State has ever produced a more brilliant race. He was an Ohioan by birth, but was brought to Indiana when but a child. His father was a farmer, and on a farm near the city of Lafayette, young Kennedy grew into a young manhood without education. Before he was of age he grew tired of farm life, and left his father's home, and went to the city of Indianapolis. He was a young man of no education, but he was a young man of no education, but he was a young man of no education.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it. It is for the good of conservative business that we should have neither panic nor a boom. A panic is destructive, but an inflation of values, is the surest precursor of the shrinkage which must inevitably follow it.

CURIOUS CONDENS.