Steelworkers at Homestead Do Honor to Their Dead Brethren

With Saddened Hearts They Laid the Four Workmen to Rest.

SOME ELOQUENT SERMONS PREACHED The four employes of Carnegie, Phipps & Co. who were killed by the explosion of molten steel in the Homestead mill Friday afternoon were buried yesterday with honors of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers. The day was a very hot one, and in the streets of Homestead the dust was deep. Several hundred people attended each of the funerals. Andrew Kebler's home was on Heisel street, where he was the owner of three houses. He left a wife and one child, which is sick with the measles. He was so terribly disfigured that his face was not exposed to the view of friends at the house. His face was not only blistered all over, but the nose had been burned off. His right arm was a black stump and below the chest his body was an almost formless einder. Not far away, on Eighth avenue, was the home of William Fagan, where his mother and wife mourned his death. He left two little children, one only a week old. He was not disfigured, and during the morning hours many friends visited the house and looked at the face. His widow was too ill to leave the house, and was delirious during the day. The funeral was attended by eight organizations, Acme, Munhall, Washington, John Kane, Thomas Marlowe and Armour lodges of the Amalgamated Association; St. Michael's Polish Society and a temperance society of the Catholic Church of St. Mary Magdalen. Kebler, Fagan and Bauer were members of Acme Lodge. The lodges met in their halls at 8 o'clock, and shortly after 9 formed on Ann street. The procession was headed by the Excelsior and Steel Works Bands. It moved to the house of Andrew Kebler, where his coffin was taken up by 12 pall bearers, who relieved one another by sixes. The coffin of William Fagns was then received into the line, and the solemn procession moved along Eighth avenue to Ann and on Ann to Tenth avenue, where St. Mary Magdalen Church HOW THEY MARCHED. Daniel W. Cush acted as chief marshal and Thomas Clifford as chief of staff. Immediately behind the Excelsior Band U. H. O'Donnell, President of Aeme Lodge, and acted as the escort of honor, preceding the coffius. Behind the coffins the mourners walked in the thick dust, followed by the other organizations. The bodies, at 9:30, were carried into the church and placed in front of the altar. The building was crowded by workingmen and their families. Rev. Father Bullion read the funeral service, with responses by the choir. He hen delivered a brief discourse. He dwelt upon the uncertainty of life and the duty of man to be ready at all times. He expressed his sorrow for the nelatives and friends of the dead, and urged all who were their friends to pray for the reposeof their souls. The service did not in all occupy more than half an hour. During the prayers one man was overcome by the hear and was carried out by two comrades. He soon recovered. The bodies were then carried to the Pittsburg, McKeesport and Youghiogheny de-pot. The Steel Works Band led the procession to the depot. A special train of nine coaches conveyed the remains and about 500 persons to Braddock, where the interment was made in the Catholic Cemetery. The new Catholic cemetery at Home-stead is not yet ready for burials. The Excelsior Band and the Cadet Drum Corps accompanied the party to Braddock. There were no services there. At 10 o'clock the funeral service was begun over the body of John Lewis. He was a married man, but his wife and three children are in Wales. He had been only 2½ months in Homestead, and boarded with Mrs. Ann Davies, on Fourteenth avenue. Mr. Lewis was the only one of the four dead men who was a Protestant The services were conducted by Rev. Benjamin

Rogers, of the Baptist Church. HE WAS NOT A UNION MAN. Lewis' face was severely blistered. His body was viewed by numerous friends be-fore the coffin was closed. The Steel Works Band and about 100 members of the various lodges of the Amalgamated Association escorted the body to the Franklin Cemetery, a mile southeast of the town. The steel workers displayed the same respect for John Lewis as for the three other dead men, although he did not belong to the association. He had not been in America long enough to become a member.

At 1:40 o'clock the train returned from Braddock. Shortly thereafter the body of Nicholas Bauer was removed from his home and conveyed to the Laferty Hill Cemetery about six miles southwest of the town, on the Brownsville turnpike. Bauer was a man of 23 years, the son of Stephen Bauer, the keeps a saloon on the borough line, at the east end. His father, mother, three sis-ters and a brother mourned his death. His mother and his youngest sister were se-verely prostrated by their affliction, and their sobs were pitiful as the casket was borne out of the house and placed in the hearse. A long line of carriages and buggies followed the remains to the cemetery The procession was escorted to the borough limits by the Steel Works Band and about 100 members of the Amalgamated Associa-tion. In the chapel at the cemetery the Catholic funeral service was performed. The proceedings of the day were through out conducted promptly and with much decorum. A spirit of genuine respect and sympathy was manifested. The exceeding heat made it a trying ordeal for the members of the bands and lodges.

It was reported last evening that S. H. Shulta, the railroad weighmaster at the steel mill, was had his arm crushed by the cars a few minutes after the explosion, was at the point of death. His shoulder was badly lacerated and his chest was crushed.

He has a wife and five children. HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE

Local Artist's Remarks About the Want of American Art Literature-A Remedy

to Supply the Deficiency. When a representative of this pap walked into the studio of a well-known local artist yesterday, he found that gentleman deeply engrossed in a magazine-shaped book, BY TURNING OUT AT THE FUNERALS with a brown-colored cover. "What work is it you have there?" the artist was asked.

"A new one, that fills a long-felt want."
replied the genius of brush and palette. "Our American literature is wofully deficient in works on the fine arts. My experience has taught me that for any subject relating to art, especially to painting, I am compelled to write to England or, better still, apply to the French or Germans. It is humiliating for a patriotic, loyal and proud son of our great Republic to have to make such a confession, but it has hitherto been the truth nevertheless. However, this work proves that we are making rapid strides of advance even in that direction. It may seem odd that in a country like ours, where political institutions, general education, mechanical appliances, agriculture, etc., are so far ahead of other nations that the fine arts have been so much neglected. But the appearance of books like this fills me with hope, especially because it has been gotten up so as to be within the reach of everybody.

Just look at it. There are 66 parts, and here are the first few numbers only 25 cents "Here you see a fine typogravure by Renouf, entitled 'Lending a Hand.' An old man is rowing a boat and his little grandchild has hold of the grandtather's oar, because she wants to help him, to lend him a hand. What a beautiful picture, and what an ornament it would make for any drawing room or parlor. But let us look further. Here you have a picture from the hand of Lobrichen, who has become famous as a great painter of children. He always puts such naturalness and playful childishness into his pictures that they at once appeal to everybody chancing to look at the amusing little mites. This steel plate, 'A Tempest in a Teapot,' is one of Lobrichen's finest works.

"Thus you can go along from one part of this book to the last, in each you find new treasures, specimens from the brushes of our best masters of the day. By simply scan-ning the book you get an idea, and by careful perusal you have acquired a knowledge of art and art workers, which is worth many times the value of the work. The biographical sketches are all well written in the most oncise and entertaining manner."

"But you have not told me the name of 'Oh, excuse me; it is 'Art and Artists of Our Time." SELMAR HESS, 93 Prince street, New York City.
