THE MILL ACCIDENT.

The accident at the Edgar Thomson works last night may possibly deprive thousands of our citizens of a valued friend, counselor and master, and the pitiful account of the flood of molten metal which enveloped Captain William R. Jones and a number of others cannot be read without pain.

It is not only true that both he and his fellow sufferers will be brought out of the shadow of death. Doubtless 10,000 hearts will echo an amen to the hope here expressed.

NOTHING IN LARGE LETTERS.

A misty autumnal shade enveloped the Convention of the Union Prohibition League at Harrisburg yesterday. Every one of the hundred and odd delegates in attendance felt that the saddest day of the year was at hand. Nobody thought of reading poetry in the convention, so a great chance to introduce Gray's Elegy or "Willie We Have Missed You," was overlooked.

But, as a piece of melancholy mummery the convention was several furlongs above the mud.

It is not every body of intelligent voters that can erect a platform without a new idea, nor is it often that a platform is made for nobody to stand upon. The Union Prohibition League has done both these things admirably and without a smile.

It did not do so well in its sagacious declaration that prohibition did not win this year for about a dozen reasons, whereas the ordinary observer of events would ascribe that memorable Waterloo solely to a lack of about one hundred and eighty thousand votes.

There was no lack of words, and Messrs. Boyer, Bigler and Johnson may all expect the lawyer's support in different degrees. Under all the circumstances, and having full regard for the league's platform, we think it is safe to say that the campaign will proceed. The league did not decide to elect anybody, so that all the candidates may still remain in the field.

Harrisburg is reported to be restless and complaining. It is suffering with wind, poor thing.

LINKING SPADE WITH PEN.

While the fact is clear that remarkable novels are not being written in these days, and while so many remedies are being suggested for the diseases of authors, it is interesting to read that B. D. Blackmore, one of the best writers of fiction England now has, spends more time cultivating flowers than writing books.

Mr. Blackmore loves his garden and takes great pains with it. It is impossible to say for certain that the virility of his style and the richness of his imagination spring from his horticultural labors, but such a deduction has much to justify it. Fresh air and physical exercise are great brain-feeders.

Assuming that Mr. Blackmore's books owe much to his healthy habits, would it not be well for novelists to take to gardening? A great many of them would undoubtedly do well to substitute horticulture for authorship. Their lives would be more useful and beautiful, exclusively applied to the culture and husbandry of flowers, fruits and vegetables. The damage to be done with a rake or hoe is inconsiderable compared to the immense possibilities of evil in the pen.

A farmer may spoil a rose bush or mar a cabbage, but as author can ruin a novel and pervert souls to destruction. Besides, a novelist of necessity must soil an infinity of good, clean paper.

The few novelists who are worth mending should try a horticultural course. They will find it wholesome if not exciting. Mr. Howells will discover that some of the creeping things, aphids, ants and other insects, about him in the garden are even smaller than his men and women of Boston. It will teach others of the modern school of fiction many a lesson in perspective and proportion. The fleshly writers will find all agree to comment on the establishment of a school by Miss Mary Moorhead for the sole purpose of encouraging the study of the Bible.

HON. PAT CALHOUN and Hon. J. D. Williamson, two Southern legislators who went through the form of fighting a duel, having been placed under arrest, may be at last in danger of feeling unpleasant effects of their little amusement. The law of Alabama is rather severe on men who pretend to shoot each other.

DEATHS OF A DAY.

Father Davin. On Tuesday there passed away at Denver, Col., another victim of the terrible Johnson's fatality. The Rev. Thomas Davin, pastor of St. Columba's church in that city, was a native of Pennsylvania. He was only 41 years old, and had been but 15 years a priest. His whole sacerdotal career was a record of heroic exertions in the cause of his fellow-men. In his own country he had been a successful preacher, and in his adopted country he had been a successful pastor.

THE TOPICAL TALKER.

The Suspicious Man's Dinner—A Chinaman says he is surprised how few people visit the ball grounds these days. He suspects many to go there.

A MIND READER has been successful in finding a pencil in Allegheny. The loss of pencils, constant as it is, does not annoy the average man as much as the disappearance of umbrellas. A mind reading method for the recovery of umbrellas would be welcome.

PEOPLE OF PROMINENCE.

JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS, who is better known as "Uncle Remus," would not take a prize at a beauty show. His mustache, which looks like the fragment of a blacking brush, struck by a cyclone, only partially conceals a face that, while his eyes seem on the point of popping, is still in order except from a nose which his most partial friend would not dare to call handsome.

JOHN JACOB ASTOR died worth $400,000 according to the Boston daily work. He was a member of the New York Stock Exchange and was one of the great financiers of his time. He was born in 1769 and died in 1848. He was a member of the New York Stock Exchange and was one of the great financiers of his time.

SEVERAL HOUSE-CLEANINGS. In Federal Harrison had not prolonged his stay at Deer Park he might have experienced the joys of house-cleaning to the full. His better half is giving the White House what folks here would call a thorough "redding up."

JAMES R. RANDALL, the author of "Maryland, My Maryland," will be known as "Single Song Randall," if he is known at all. That spirited lyric was inspired by the first blood shed in the streets of Baltimore. He was a member of the New York Stock Exchange and was one of the great financiers of his time.

MARK TWAIN lives an idle, easy-going sort of life. He is reported to have said that he would like to see a great many more of the sort of people who do not admire the sweeping out of Corporal Tanner. The President does not appear to be very proud of it himself.

AGUSTINE DALY, one of the most successful of theatrical managers, has nothing very original in his face or figure. Beginning as a journeyman actor, he rose to the rank of a short time he began to write or rather to adapt plays. His first successful effort in this line was "Loah," which was produced on Broadway in 1852.

THE WESTERN'S POSITION. The publication of a statement from a prominent official of the Pittsburgh and Western Railroad in our columns to-day as to the status of that corporation will dissipate a number of rumors that have been current since Mr. Callery's death in relation to the controlling interest in its affairs. It is clear from this rehearsal of facts that the Pittsburgh and Western cannot change hands for several years unless Messrs. Drezel, Morgan & Co. see fit to abandon their powers of control.
