

IF THEY WERE WOMEN.

Famous Men Tell What They Would Do Under the Circumstances.

DAD BOB BURDETTE'S PROGRAMME.

Max O'Neil Would Crave for Triumphant Arch and Adoration.

THE POET OF THE SIERRAS ON WOMAN

(WRITTEN FOR THE DISPATCH.)

As in our issue of last Sunday some ten of our famous men told what they would do if they were men, now we give the men a chance to reverse the discussion and tell what they would do if they were women.

BURDETTE WOULD BE A BELLE

And Contemptuously Refuse to Be Any Assistance Whatever.

What would I do if I were a woman? I wouldn't try to be a man. That's about all I could do.

I wouldn't shudder and groan every time the name of the monster was mentioned, but I would studiously avoid acquiring the slightest of his many accomplishments and the best of his manifold ways.

I would never learn to lay a fire, in range or fireplace. Every time I touched a fire, summer or winter, I would put it out. Then I'd never be expected to make one.

The first loaf of bread I baked I would let drop on the dog and kill him. Then I'd never be asked to bake bread again, and I'd get a new dog.

When I descended into the laundry, I would manage to bring out all the fancy napkins white as snow, and the white shirts as blue as the skies of June.

I would pinch every baby that was given to me black and blue in half a dozen places before it could catch its breath enough to shriek, and I would frighten the lie or tear the temper out of anybody's children whom I was asked to nurse.

I'd never be troubled with other people's young ones, and nobody would ever ask me to teach the infant class while the tired teacher took a vacation.

I had to sit on the front seat when asked to drive, I would carry a large sun umbrella, and gouge the driver's eyes out and run the motor car off the road at the first mile out. Then I'd get the back seat on the shady side every time ever afterward.

I would always sit sideways in a street car. Then I would have plenty of room.

I would wear a carriage dress in the street car if I had no other place in which to show it off.

I would smash something choice and expensive every time I swept a room or dusted a parlor. Then I'd never be asked to do such work.

I would never rise during the playing, and never kneel during prayer. Then people would notice me, and say: "Who is that pretty girl with such lovely eyes?"

At the theater I would wear the biggest hat obtainable.

At cricket and lawn tennis matches I would sit in the front row and raise my parasol.

I would cultivate such charming helplessness, such hopeless innocence, such pretty, childish ignorance, such fascinating demure, such exquisite naivete, that any woman should be a man; a woman, and nothing else.

There is no reason why there should be any distinction as to the line which divides man's appropriate sphere and woman's particular sphere. Every man knows when he is engaged in his right occupation, and so does every woman, and when they attempt otherwise they become objects of contempt.

That is, daughter, if other women would be for such a sweet little bit of selfishness. May be they would. You know best. But then I do how women regard that sort of a woman.

But, you can gamble your peace of mind your love of your enjoyments, your life that the Monster Man wouldn't torment the solitude of such a woman with his presence longer than a day or two, and she would thus be spared the weary and weary annoyances to which mankind is subjected.

ROBERT J. BURDETTE.

JOAQUIN MILLER PHILOSOPHIZES.

He Talks of the Modern Era's Emphasis for New Wig Leaves.

If I were a woman, what would I do; and not do?

Now, let us look into this thing, as the man said when he fell in the well, and go back to the beginning.

God created the heavens and the earth. Then, we read in the Good Book that he rested on the seventh day. Then the Lord God made man "of the dust of the ground."

And then he rested again. And then the Lord God "planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he had formed."

(WRITTEN FOR THE DISPATCH.)

"Made in five moves." That was one of two gentlemen who were playing a game of chess in a club house recently.

Three moves were made, but while still fought hard. Four moves, and he would not give in. Five moves, and the player of black announced:

It is safe to say that now there are a score of players to every one there was ten years ago.

It has been estimated that there are 20,000 players residing in New York City and Brooklyn.

Chess players are, as a rule, great thinkers. It is to be expected as a chess player or one has to be successful in chess playing.

Eugene Delmar is considered to be the best amateur player in the country. He is ranked as the best amateur of the New York state and lives in New York City.

Among the champions of Boston is young Burrill. He is only 19 years of age, but plays a wonderful game.

Another player who can hold his own with any player in the country is Captain George H. McKenzie, of Brooklyn.

Secretary of State James G. Blaine is a very clever chess player. He plays a close, careful game, and is particularly fond of the chess game.

William Steinitz is regarded everywhere as the best player in the world, and the greatest all-round player living.

Russell Sage is a very good player. He makes chess a hobby, and is said to dream of chess when he is asleep.

Another player who can hold his own with any player in the country is Captain George H. McKenzie, of Brooklyn.

Secretary of State James G. Blaine is a very clever chess player. He plays a close, careful game, and is particularly fond of the chess game.

in which he had grown up, and for which his heart had longed, there lay a dust heap of ruins.

It had been a proud thought that, in spite of his birth, he had risen to power and dignity, and that now, as the leader of a great army, he might indeed show of what great deeds he was capable.

There was no lack of admirers, as he entered the city, for the first time he had been greeted with such enthusiasm.

His soul clung to the standards under which he had fought, and to the men who had followed him, and for a moment he forgot all else.

George Rehelbach is the best amateur in the Quaker City. He plays all the tournaments and has won a number of prizes.

He is a good solver, too, of some of the hardest problems. Jacob Eisen, a newspaper editor, is also a good all-round player.
