

THE STOLEN TREASURE.

ERNEST H. HEINRICH'S.

INOBAS, the dwarf King had two servants. They were both young fellows and their master had taken them into his castle...

"Well, Master, I have often heard that gold is about as good a thief as a man can have in this world..."

"All right, young man, you shall have whatever you want, so here you are!" Then he put his hand under his throne...

"No, sir," replied he. "I do not care much for money, although I do not despise it. If you can give me something, that will be of benefit to the whole world..."

"I do not think so," said the young man. "I believe that money sometimes does people more harm than good."

"I believe that money sometimes does people more harm than good," said the young man. "I believe that money sometimes does people more harm than good..."
