

NEWS AT A GLANCE

W. W. Young Gives Assignee McKelvey's Position.

YOUNG NOT IN LONG & CO.

Depositors Will Try to Have Assignee Removed.

AND A RECEIVER CHOSEN INSTEAD.

Cashier Hoer, Although Under Secretary's Seal, Talks Hopefully.

GENERAL GOSSIP OF A LIVELY DAY.

President Young, of the Lawrence Bank, was visited last evening by a reporter for THE DISPATCH, and he said: "I have no more to do with the bank than your hat. This afternoon I signed the papers for Mr. McKelvey, who is the President of the Third National, of Allegheny. I am not in the bank, and I do not know who he is a thoroughly reliable man, and everybody who knows him has confidence in him. This afternoon when I came out of Mr. McKelvey's office, in the Diamond, I met two members of the kicking committee, appointed last night, who were very anxious to know who Mr. McKelvey was, and whether it was true that he is a stockholder."

"I, Mr. McKelvey, the assignee, a stockholder of the bank?" was the direct question put.

"He is, he was, in fact, a stockholder before I went into the institution. He has been a stockholder ever since. For 15 years Mr. McKelvey has been a stockholder."

HE IS NOT IN THE FIRM.

Confronted with the statement published in an evening paper that he was a member of the firm of Long & Co., Mr. Young replied emphatically and strongly:

"I am not now, and never have been, a member of the firm of Long & Co. I most positively deny ever having been either an active or a silent partner of this firm. As to the bank's affairs, viewed from any other standpoint than the false one just alluded to, they are now altogether out of my control, everything being in the hands of the assignee, Mr. McKelvey."

Concerning the report that there were close ties of consanguinity between the family of President Young and the firm of Long & Co., it may be stated that the elder Mr. Long is related by marriage to Mrs. Young, and that Mr. Brown, of Long & Co., is a nephew of the same lady.

MR. HOER TALKS AT LENGTH.

Cashier John Hoer was interviewed last evening by a DISPATCH reporter. During the conversation Mr. Hoer evidently felt his position. His voice was tremulous with emotion. He said:

My instructions from Assignee McKelvey were to be strictly reticent about the affairs of the bank. He gave me definite instructions not to reveal anything about the standing of the bank or the liabilities of the bank with the liabilities of assets. These instructions I will follow to the letter.

Mr. Hoer, on being pressed to give some idea how the assets stood, said:

Mr. McKelvey himself sent over the various assets to-day, and as far as we can at present discern the depositors will be paid their money. However, this is all subject to the authoritative, for before we can give an account of the assets, we must first determine fully over the books, and see how the liabilities and the assets tally. The present indications are that the assets will be sufficient to pay the depositors. We will come out all right, but about the future of the bank, I cannot say anything. All we want to do now is to wind up the affairs as satisfactorily and as quickly as we can.

Mr. Hoer was asked to state the amount of the liabilities; he could not be persuaded to divulge the amount, and again returned the reporter for further information to the assignee.

A BIG DEPOSITOR SERENE.

Mr. John Matthews, a depositor in the Lawrence Bank to the tune of $51,900, was seen last night. He said:

The depositors' meeting at the Fifteenth Ward Schoolhouse was not a representative meeting of depositors, nor were the officers of the committee. It was a meeting of the creditors of the bank. A few politicians went to raise a ferment over the failure, and they will exert their influence to the detriment of the bank. I believe the liabilities of the bank are $200,000 and the assets $150,000. I believe the bank has property which will more than cover it. If the bank pays 75 cents on the dollar, I feel assured that I will be paid in full. I do not intend to bowl over the pit that I deposited there. I do not propose to contribute to the expenses of the Depositors' Committee.

HE CAME TO THE RESCUE.

"You stated at the depositors' meeting that you put in $51,900 at the eleventh hour. How did you mean that?"

"I put it in to help the bank out. As I had faith in it. Under the same conditions I would do the same thing again."

"Were you asked to contribute to the expenses of the bank officials?"

"I prefer not to answer that question."

DEPOSITORS WANT A RECEIVER.

The committee representing the Lawrence Bank depositors met yesterday afternoon. While nothing was given out officially, it was reported that the committee decided to secure the services of two attorneys to present papers in court for the removal of the assignee, William M. McKelvey, and in his stead appoint a receiver to wind up the affairs of the bank.

It was also decided to send a committee to Harrisburg to ask Gen. Kirkpatrick to represent the State, as the depositors believe the law of the Commonwealth have been violated. The committee solicited a statement of the responsibilities of the assignee, Mr. Hoer, but the latter refused to give it.

The committee met again last evening in the office of Senator Upperman and decided to send the committee to Harrisburg. A call was issued for a meeting of the depositors on Friday evening at the Lawrence School.

Representatives of the Lawrence School Board made a formal demand upon President Young yesterday afternoon for the school's money, amounting to $1,600, which Mr. Young had in his possession as Treasurer of the Board. Mr. Young promised to return the money to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. William M. McKelvey, the assignee of the Lawrence Bank, is a brother of John H. McKelvey, the white bank manufacturer, of the firm of Armstrong & McKelvey, and is at present living at his brother's house on Negley avenue, in the Nineteenth ward. He was in the city last evening by a reporter for THE DISPATCH, but declined to say anything concerning the Lawrence Bank, saying that he had been worn out by the importunities of the day and desired rest for the responsibilities of the morning.

INCIDENTS OF THE DAY.

The choice of William M. McKelvey, President of the Third National Bank of Allegheny, assignee of the Lawrence Bank, appears to give about as much satisfaction as would that of any other man.

Mrs. Michael Flanagan, William F. Eichenlaub, Charles F. Hilger, E. J. Richerson and Senator John Upperman were busy engaged yesterday trying the plans and square on the reputation, and so far as heard from it stood all right, and they will not probably make any move until after he has made a report, but they swear by the great turned spoon that if any officer of the bank is shown to be crooked he shall be taken care of.

THE NON-PARTISAN HUSTLE

They Have Drafted a Strong Constitution and By-Laws.

NON-PARTISAN W. C. T. U. BREAK

Chester and Butler Counties Lead in the Revolt.

A STATE CONVENTION IMPENDING

WORKED THE REAR DOOR.

Mr. John M. Kennedy was equally as hard to reach until the inquirer happened to see a note which allowed him to enter the sanctuary and opened it gently. Mr. Kennedy suspended work long enough to say there was nothing new in the affairs of the W. C. T. U., and then went on with his business.

Lawyers are, as a rule, amiable men to interview, but if they don't want to talk they don't often allow a reporter to force them to worry them "nor stamp wrinkles in the brow of youth nor cadent tears feed changes in their cheeks. One who is counsel for a stockholder of the Lawrence Bank, and who is a thoroughly reliable man, and everybody who knows him has confidence in him. This afternoon when I came out of Mr. McKelvey's office, in the Diamond, I met two members of the kicking committee, appointed last night, who were very anxious to know who Mr. McKelvey was, and whether it was true that he is a stockholder."

"I, Mr. McKelvey, the assignee, a stockholder of the bank?" was the direct question put.

"He is, he was, in fact, a stockholder before I went into the institution. He has been a stockholder ever since. For 15 years Mr. McKelvey has been a stockholder."

HE IS NOT IN THE FIRM.

Confronted with the statement published in an evening paper that he was a member of the firm of Long & Co., Mr. Young replied emphatically and strongly:

"I am not now, and never have been, a member of the firm of Long & Co. I most positively deny ever having been either an active or a silent partner of this firm. As to the bank's affairs, viewed from any other standpoint than the false one just alluded to, they are now altogether out of my control, everything being in the hands of the assignee, Mr. McKelvey."

Concerning the report that there were close ties of consanguinity between the family of President Young and the firm of Long & Co., it may be stated that the elder Mr. Long is related by marriage to Mrs. Young, and that Mr. Brown, of Long & Co., is a nephew of the same lady.

MR. HOER TALKS AT LENGTH.

Cashier John Hoer was interviewed last evening by a DISPATCH reporter. During the conversation Mr. Hoer evidently felt his position. His voice was tremulous with emotion. He said:

My instructions from Assignee McKelvey were to be strictly reticent about the affairs of the bank. He gave me definite instructions not to reveal anything about the standing of the bank or the liabilities of the bank with the liabilities of assets. These instructions I will follow to the letter.

Mr. Hoer, on being pressed to give some idea how the assets stood, said:

Mr. McKelvey himself sent over the various assets to-day, and as far as we can at present discern the depositors will be paid their money. However, this is all subject to the authoritative, for before we can give an account of the assets, we must first determine fully over the books, and see how the liabilities and the assets tally. The present indications are that the assets will be sufficient to pay the depositors. We will come out all right, but about the future of the bank, I cannot say anything. All we want to do now is to wind up the affairs as satisfactorily and as quickly as we can.

Mr. Hoer was asked to state the amount of the liabilities; he could not be persuaded to divulge the amount, and again returned the reporter for further information to the assignee.

A BIG DEPOSITOR SERENE.

Mr. John Matthews, a depositor in the Lawrence Bank to the tune of $51,900, was seen last night. He said:

The depositors' meeting at the Fifteenth Ward Schoolhouse was not a representative meeting of depositors, nor were the officers of the committee. It was a meeting of the creditors of the bank. A few politicians went to raise a ferment over the failure, and they will exert their influence to the detriment of the bank. I believe the liabilities of the bank are $200,000 and the assets $150,000. I believe the bank has property which will more than cover it. If the bank pays 75 cents on the dollar, I feel assured that I will be paid in full. I do not intend to bowl over the pit that I deposited there. I do not propose to contribute to the expenses of the Depositors' Committee.

HE CAME TO THE RESCUE.

"You stated at the depositors' meeting that you put in $51,900 at the eleventh hour. How did you mean that?"

"I put it in to help the bank out. As I had faith in it. Under the same conditions I would do the same thing again."

"Were you asked to contribute to the expenses of the bank officials?"

"I prefer not to answer that question."

DEPOSITORS WANT A RECEIVER.

The committee representing the Lawrence Bank depositors met yesterday afternoon. While nothing was given out officially, it was reported that the committee decided to secure the services of two attorneys to present papers in court for the removal of the assignee, William M. McKelvey, and in his stead appoint a receiver to wind up the affairs of the bank.

It was also decided to send a committee to Harrisburg to ask Gen. Kirkpatrick to represent the State, as the depositors believe the law of the Commonwealth have been violated. The committee solicited a statement of the responsibilities of the assignee, Mr. Hoer, but the latter refused to give it.

The committee met again last evening in the office of Senator Upperman and decided to send the committee to Harrisburg. A call was issued for a meeting of the depositors on Friday evening at the Lawrence School.

Representatives of the Lawrence School Board made a formal demand upon President Young yesterday afternoon for the school's money, amounting to $1,600, which Mr. Young had in his possession as Treasurer of the Board. Mr. Young promised to return the money to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. William M. McKelvey, the assignee of the Lawrence Bank, is a brother of John H. McKelvey, the white bank manufacturer, of the firm of Armstrong & McKelvey, and is at present living at his brother's house on Negley avenue, in the Nineteenth ward. He was in the city last evening by a reporter for THE DISPATCH, but declined to say anything concerning the Lawrence Bank, saying that he had been worn out by the importunities of the day and desired rest for the responsibilities of the morning.

INCIDENTS OF THE DAY.

The choice of William M. McKelvey, President of the Third National Bank of Allegheny, assignee of the Lawrence Bank, appears to give about as much satisfaction as would that of any other man.

Mrs. Michael Flanagan, William F. Eichenlaub, Charles F. Hilger, E. J. Richerson and Senator John Upperman were busy engaged yesterday trying the plans and square on the reputation, and so far as heard from it stood all right, and they will not probably make any move until after he has made a report, but they swear by the great turned spoon that if any officer of the bank is shown to be crooked he shall be taken care of.

ANOTHER ELOPEMENT.

Miss Ella Heaps Weds Mr. Chester W. Thompson Despite Parental Objections—The Common Route Was Taken.

The elopement fever continues to run neck and neck with other contagious affections which are now prevalent in this city. The latest episode of this line is the runaway of a 17-year-old miss with a well-known society young man who is not yet out of his teens.

The parties in the game of hearts, which was played in New Jersey last Sunday morning, are Miss Ella Heaps, daughter of the well-known grocer on Fifth avenue, and Chester W. Thompson, clerk in the Fidelity Title and Trust Company's office on Fourth avenue. The young lady is just out of school, and has been acting as cashier in her father's store since she was sixteen at Logan street. She met Mr. Thompson at a party about a year and a half ago, and the friendship which followed soon ripened into love.

Young Thompson was a clerk in the Fidelity Title and Trust Company's office on Fourth avenue. The young lady is just out of school, and has been acting as cashier in her father's store since she was sixteen at Logan street. She met Mr. Thompson at a party about a year and a half ago, and the friendship which followed soon ripened into love.

They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her lover and the pair went to the city station. There they took the Erie express for Philadelphia. Upon arriving in the Quaker City, they hurried to Camden and asked the first minister they ran across to perform the ceremony. Mr. Prinszke, who was called upon to officiate, was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia. He was a young man of about 25 years of age, and was dressed in a suit of dark cloth. He was a member of the Episcopal church, and was a native of Philadelphia.

After the short but interesting ceremony the couple departed for their new home. They were seen together yesterday morning at the Heaps residence, and some time ago asked the young lady's father for his daughter's hand. This was refused on account of the tender years of Miss Ella, but it could not be said to be the flame of love. The entreaties of the young lady were of no avail, and last week the couple decided to elope.

Sunday morning Miss Heaps got up very early, and without taking much baggage with her left the house. She was joined by her