

GOOD THINGS COMING.
The Chamberlain's
THE DISPATCH has a series of European sketches, the first, "Studies in Dressing," will appear Sunday.

FORTY-FOURTH YEAR.

ALL HANDS AT WORK.

Ohio Senatorial Candidates Gathering Their Forces

AT THE STATE CAPITAL

No Known Change in the Chances of Brice or Thomas.

BOTH ARE CONFIDENT AS EVER.

The Friends of the National Chairman
Frend of His Backing.

BETTING TWO TO ONE ON BRICE

The prominent Senatorial candidates in Ohio are hurrying to Columbus. Their friends are being straightened as far as possible, a number of members of the Legislature having already arrived. Few of the latter are committal, however. Thomas and Brice are as confident as ever.

SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.

COLUMBUS, O., January 2.—Every train which came into the city today brought large numbers of politicians who are interested in one or the other candidates for the United States Senate. A large per cent of the members of Legislature have also arrived, and are claiming unusual attention. There are at least two or three workers and persons for each member, who have been detailed to keep them in line in the interest of the respective candidates. This is on the theory that the greater portion of the work has been done before the members reach Columbus. The people who are engaged in the Senatorial contest are augmented by a mass of lesser lights who are looking after the offices to be given out in the organization of the two branches of the Legislature. The respective chances for this will be held Saturday.

A POSSIBLE TEST.

Senatorial forces profess to be holding back in their aggressive work, to discount the well-authenticated report that they are taking a hand in the organization of the House. While both the Brice and Thomas managers have nothing to do with it, it is generally understood that the vote in the caucus on Speaker of the House will be a fair indication of the relative strength of the two leading candidates, Brice and Thomas. Hysell, the labor candidate, is being aided in his ambitions by the Brice workers. There is a strong feeling that there is a great deal of work being done. Both candidates are professing vigor, and insisting that their friends are of the most unselfish character and are working for them through love and admiration alone. The tactics of the two leading candidates are in a great measure tame, and they are not urging the point of finance against each other, though it is likely that this feature of the contest will be developed by John A. McMahon, the third most prominent candidate, who is announced to-night.

BURY ANSWERING CHARGES.

Up to this evening Thomas was the only candidate on the ground, and his managers have kept him in a constant state of charges in regard to the improper use of money. They promptly deny a report that he had sided Senator Gaumer in any way, and the feeling by these little episodes is being fanned into a more active flame. The members come in, that there is a large per cent of them who are not pledged to any of the candidates, and this gives the most prominent candidates, and especially McMahon, friends, considerable ground. All the advances which have been made seem to be in the persuasive line. There are, of course, exceptions to this. The real news of the situation would be a roster of the members as to their preferences among the candidates. This, however, cannot be had, as a majority of the members themselves refuse to be committed, and the candidates apparently do not have sufficient confidence in their claims to make out lists of those from whom they expect support for publication.

BOSTONERS IN THEIR CLAIMS.

This situation leaves the candidates to put in their time in boisterous claims. Both Brice and Thomas' managers are making a full hand at this business. The Brice men claim to have a better chance, but many of the latter are not so confident. The second ballot, they insist, is good enough for them. Thomas' men are equally confident, and think they will have votes to spare.

EARNEST WORK IS EXPECTED FROM NOW ON.

Col Brice arrived this evening, and went directly to his headquarters at the Bell. He was met there by General A. V. Rice, Congressman Yoder, Congressman Anderson, ex-Congressman W. D. Hill, Ike Hill, W. B. Ritchie, J. B. Townsend, and others of prominence. The Brice forces point with pride to the character and standing of the men whom they have on the ground. General Rice is out in a long interview, in which he reviews the career of Brice and enters into detail as to the reasons why he thinks Brice should be selected Senator. He asks it in behalf of the solid Democracy of the Northwest, and says it is the only thing for the Democracy of the State to do at this time.

MORE REASON FOR BRICE.

Another prominent Democrat, in a burst of admiration, said: "In my judgment the liberal against the Democratic party of Ohio, the staunchest and most energetic member of the Legislature, the threatened dangers to our National Democratic Committee, can be best met by the support of the authors of this great wrong to our party placed in their proper attitude before the people by the support of Brice and by doing it in a very emphatic manner. Mr. Brice, upon his arrival, received a warm reception. For the past three days he has been confined to his room in Lima, suffering from the disease that is sweeping over the whole world, 'the grippe,' or, as it is called here, the influenza, but he is much better now, and will be all right in a few days, although looking a bit pale. Mr. Brice was visited this evening by THE DISPATCH correspondent at his headquarters at the Bell House, and asked concerning his prospects. He replied:

MR. BRICE HAS LITTLE TO SAY.

"Though assuming to Sarapost to the press, I have no figures to give on the 'Senatorship, but you simply say that I am very well satisfied as to the outlook and expect to be nominated."

What about the report that you are forming a combination with a candidate for Speaker of the House?" was asked.

"There is not a word of truth in such a report," answered the Ohio statesman. "I am making no deal for Senator, and shall use all honorable means to be elected, but that is all, and I have no choice as to whom shall be elected Speaker. All are good men and the caucus can make no mistake."

Wagers of 2 to 1 on Brice in any amount go begging, no one being willing to take the hard end of the bet against Brice. The Thomas men are claiming that all the opposition to Brice will crystallize on their man, and that the real fight will be between Brice and McMahon, after the complimentary balloting is over.

BOOKWALTER IS PLATTERED.

But He Will Enter No Scramble for the High Office.

SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.
SPRINGFIELD, O., January 2.—Hon. John W. Bookwalter, who is prominently mentioned as an aspirant to the Senatorship, arrived here to-day from New York City. Very strangely, indeed, Hon. John McMahon, the other Ohio candidate at this time, arrived here just a few minutes after the great cosmopolitan had alighted from a train. They met a few minutes later, and Bookwalter, who is a close friend of McMahon's, was seen to shake hands with McMahon, and Mr. McMahon became Mr. Bookwalter's guest at the Lagoda House, which the latter owns. The two reasons for McMahon's visit to Springfield are, it is thought, Mr. Bookwalter's right-hand man, dined together, and discussed the matter now agitating Ohio politics, and Mr. Bookwalter's visit to Springfield, he will enter into no scramble for the office.

Mr. McMahon said he was here on legal business, and that he proposed to "let the other fellows do the fighting, when he would come in for the usufruct. Judge Bookwalter, however, said that he thought McMahon or Thomas would be elected.

ATTEMPTS TO KILL A PRIEST.

Father Kelly, of Escapes, Escapes Poison to be Stung at His Door.

SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.
ROME, N. Y., January 2.—The Rev. Father Kelly, of Escapes, this morning narrowly escaped death by the hands of some unknown person on the threshold of his own door. On October 8, last, an unsuccessful attempt to kill Father Kelly, by mixing poison with the communion, was made by some unknown person. At that time Father Kelly lay between life and death, but recovered. At about 10 o'clock this morning Father Kelly was awakened by the ringing of his door bell. He asked who was there, and the reply was that of a priest. He opened the door, and he hastily drew on his clothing and partly opened the door. As he did so he was struck on the head with a blow which forced it open. At the same moment he struck Father Kelly on the head just above the eye with a heavy bar of iron. The blow probably saved his life. The blow was a glancing one, and made no serious wound. On October 8, last, an unsuccessful attempt to kill Father Kelly, by mixing poison with the communion, was made by some unknown person. At that time Father Kelly lay between life and death, but recovered. At about 10 o'clock this morning Father Kelly was awakened by the ringing of his door bell. He asked who was there, and the reply was that of a priest. He opened the door, and he hastily drew on his clothing and partly opened the door. As he did so he was struck on the head with a blow which forced it open. At the same moment he struck Father Kelly on the head just above the eye with a heavy bar of iron. The blow probably saved his life. The blow was a glancing one, and made no serious wound. On October 8, last, an unsuccessful attempt to kill Father Kelly, by mixing poison with the communion, was made by some unknown person. At that time Father Kelly lay between life and death, but recovered. At about 10 o'clock this morning Father Kelly was awakened by the ringing of his door bell. He asked who was there, and the reply was that of a priest. He opened the door, and he hastily drew on his clothing and partly opened the door. As he did so he was struck on the head with a blow which forced it open. At the same moment he struck Father Kelly on the head just above the eye with a heavy bar of iron. The blow probably saved his life. The blow was a glancing one, and made no serious wound.

PRIZE SONGS AND POEMS.

Successful Conclusion of the First Welsh National Bazaar.

SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.
CHICAGO, January 2.—The first Welsh National Bazaar closed to-night, at the Central Music Hall, with a concert, the feature of which was the contest for the grand song prize of $500. There were six competitors for the bass solo prize, "Now Heaven in Full of Glory Shone." Daniel W. Dwyer, of Chicago, was the successful winner. The contest for the prize on the essay, "The True Position of Woman in Society," was won by Elinor Connolly, of New York City. The $50 prize for a poem, "A Memory of the Rev. John G. Jones," was awarded to John Jones, of Wales. The Ben Phillips Choir, of Chicago, won the $500 grand prize. Prizes were also awarded to the winners of the other contests.

A KENTUCKY DISTILLERY SOLD.

An English Syndicate Secures Control of Anderson County Property.

LOUISVILLE, January 2.—Mr. T. R. Ripley, the Anderson county distiller, has sold to the English syndicate, represented by N. Hoffheimer, promoter of New York, a two-thirds interest in his distillery, which was valued at $100,000. Mr. Ripley retained as manager of the business for a period of five years, at a salary of $8,000 a year. All his brands of whisky, together with all rights, titles and interests in these distilleries pass with the sale.

AN OLD MAN'S FATAL MISTAKE.

He Tried to Open the Wrong Door and is Shot at the Threshold.

CINCINNATI, January 2.—Edward Sherman, merchant, was awakened at 3 A. M. by the sound of some one knocking at the lock of the door to his room. Thinking it was a burglar, he fired through the panel and heard a heavy fall. Upon opening the door he found he had mortally shot H. Phillips, a real estate agent, who had occupied an adjoining room, and had gone to Mr. Sherman's door by mistake.

THREE LABOR ORDERS COMBINE.

Farmers' Alliance and Grange People to Combine With the K. of L.

TOPEKA, January 2.—The Farmers' Alliance, State Grange and Knights of Labor have formed an offensive and defensive alliance, according to the terms of a convention held at Topeka, Kan., and the authors of this great wrong to our party placed in their proper attitude before the people by the support of Brice and by doing it in a very emphatic manner. Mr. Brice, upon his arrival, received a warm reception. For the past three days he has been confined to his room in Lima, suffering from the disease that is sweeping over the whole world, 'the grippe,' or, as it is called here, the influenza, but he is much better now, and will be all right in a few days, although looking a bit pale. Mr. Brice was visited this evening by THE DISPATCH correspondent at his headquarters at the Bell House, and asked concerning his prospects. He replied:

MR. BRICE HAS LITTLE TO SAY.

"Though assuming to Sarapost to the press, I have no figures to give on the 'Senatorship, but you simply say that I am very well satisfied as to the outlook and expect to be nominated."

MAY RESULT IN A REBELLION.

Columbian Indians Ready to Revolt Against the Government.

SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.
NEW YORK, January 2.—The Steamship News, from Colon, to-day brought interesting information. The New York merchants, whose vessels have recently been seized by the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas, in a big canoe, and the American vessels to go to their relief in spite of the interference of the Colombian authorities. These natives are entirely dependent for their livelihood upon their trade with American vessels. The interruption of trade has left thousands of them absolutely destitute. The declared policy of the Colombian Government while trading on the San Blas coast, south of Colon. Captain Ellis, of the seized schooner Willie, also owned by Foster & Co., writes from Colon that he sees no prospect of getting away with his vessel, so he has discharged his crew and is coming home. He adds that a crew of Indians came up the coast from San Blas