NEW YORK, January 9.—That portion of the Supreme Court over which Judge Morgan T. O'Brien presides was filled to overflowing to-day by a crowd partaking of the baseball character, who expected to listen to arguments by counsel respecting the validity of contracts between the National League and its players, and in which the Metropolitan Exhibition Company, controlling the New York Club, is the plaintiff, and John and Ed Hanlon will be in Pittsburg to-morrow morning."

Mr. Bray had much to say about John L. Sullivan and others. During a conversation he said: "The big fellow is in good condition, but the Richburg case is troubling him convident him know that it is intended to make matters warm for Sullivan and his friends down in Mississippi. I really think the appeal against the one year's sentence will be useless. If it is, it is needless to talk about a fight between Sullivan will go to New Orleans next month, and if the appeal goes against him he will take his medicine like a brave man. If he has to do that it would be well in the meantime for Jackson and Slavin to prove who is the better man between them. Sullivan need not be in first-class trin to settle either of them, but I would like to see him meet the new York Club, is the plaintiff, and John M. Ward, of the Players' League is the defendant. An injunction was moved for last week to restrain John M. Ward from playing with any organization other than the National League, but the mass of evidence that was to be presented induced Judge O'Brien to postpone the case until to-day, so that the whole matter could be probed to the bottem and a fights him. In this respect he is like Sullivan." matter could be probed to the bottom and a proper decision rendered. The case was sixth on the calendar, and it was but a short time after court convened that His Honor called: "The Metropolitan Exhibition Company versus John M. Ward."

THE LEGAL LIMBS. Messrs. Choate and Beaman, with George M. Duysters, of counsel for the New York club, were early upon the scene of action and ex-Judge Howland and his colleague, Mr. Andermediately beside their opponents. The relations between the learned experts of the law were of the friendliest character, and before and during the argument of Mr. Beaman, Junge Howland and Mr. Choate had frequent chasts together. Among the important base hall personages present were: President John B. Day, Directors Charles T. Dillingham, Walter Appleton and Joa Gordon, of the Metropolitan Exhibition Company: President Byrne, of the Brooklyn club; Manager Mutrie, John Ward, Tim Keefe, George Gore and Buck Becannon, Mr. Beaman presented the case of the plaintiff and asked for the restraint of the defendant, Ward, from playing with any other club. In support of the request he carefully explained to the court what the game of base-ball really was, how the clubs were constituted and managed; told what the national agreement was and the methods of the Brotherhood and the Players' League.

The Club's BENEFITS.

He dwel: at some length on how the New York derived its benefits, claiming that it was principally by the reputation and ability of its players. Dropping his manuscript for a moment, and looking at Judge O'Brien smilingly, sop, of counsel for the Players' League, sat imson, of counsel for the Players Areague, as the mediately beside their opponents. The rela-tions between the learned experts of the law were of the friendilest character, and before and during the argument of Mr. Beaman, principally by the reputation and ability of its players. Dropping his manuscript for a monent and look! c at Judge O'Brien smilingly. "In addition to Ward's good qualities as a ball player he is a lawyer." This amused the court in general. The contract with the players was read through burriedly until the copplementary contract with Ward was "Not satisfied with the original contract," said Mr. Beaman, "Ward insisted on signing a contract of his own in which the word reserve was omitted. But I would like to know the the word reserve included and the supplementary contract which Ward signed. That contract stated that he shall not be held for 1890 on a salary less than $5,000. Is not that a reserve contract? Suppose he was offered $5,000 or more, would not that held him under his own contract? We think it undoubtedly would. This supplementary boutract is natively.

In concluding Mr. Beaman said: "The question is, have we a contract with Ward? Is he bound by it? Or is it simply an ordinary laborer's contract which can be broken without recourse to the law?"

HOWLAND CALLED DOWN. Ex-Judge Howland settled humself for an extended argument after Mr. Beaman had con-cluded, but Mr. Choate was on his feet in an instant, and claimed that Juage Howland's procedure was at total variance with the law, and asked the Court's interposition. Judge Howland was anxious to present a mass of affidavits, in support of which he would be obliged to refer at some length to the National League from its inception to the present time. Judge O'Brien said that Mr. Howland's course was the general one, and if he insisted the case was the general one, and if he insisted the case would have to proceed, but he thought the only proper way in this instance was to give the plaintiff an opportunity to reply to his affidavits.

Ex-Judge Howland—Your Honor, it is absolutely necessary to have this case ended as soon as possible. There is a desperate struggle going on between the players and the plaintiff, and the sooner the matter is settled the better it will be for both sides.

Mr. Choate—But we have not seen your affidavits, and cannot make a proper defense. We davits, and cannot make a proper defense. We may want to serve a few additional affidavits

Judge O'Brien-How long, Mr. Choate, will you require?

Mr. Choule—A week from to-day.
Mr. Howland—That will be satisfactory to us, but they've got our thunder. I have just handed them our briefs and they'll know as much about our defense as we do.
Mr. Choate—Oh, all we want is a—shortstop.
His Honor and everybody else was much amused at this remark. This ended the case until next Thursday. amused at this remark. until next Thursday.

The Cleveland Players' League club will procoed legally against every ball player who has signed a contract with it and then signed with the League club. Not only that, but suits will also be brought against the players who signed the original agreement and have since signed with the League. This means that Zimmer, McKean, Beatin and Gilks will be defendants an suits at law.

A Colored Walter Who Made Free With th Bosses' Stock. A 21-year-old colored waiter in street restaurant was arrested yesterday on a warrant from Judge McKenna, charging him with the receipt of stolen goods.

H. Hannach & Bro., dealers in furnishing goods, of No. 30 Sixth street, next door to Bing's, were the prosecutors. Hannach & Bro. have been missing goods from their store, but until Wednesday could find no clew to the cause of their departure. On that day a box of cigars was found in the store, and its ownership was traced to a boy in the store. The cigars were of a brand one of the Hannach firm was accustomed to buy in Bing's restaurant. He went to Bing, and the latter found that a box of his he confessed to having stolen a lot of goods from the store and trading them to Wilson, the colored waiter arrested, for cigars, truit and candy. This wasting of sweetness upon the desert air of Sixth street was more than the bosses in each case could stand; hence the arrest.

An information was entered against Wilson, who confessed at once. His house in Allegheny was searched and a lot of the stolen goods were recovered. The Hannach firm have decided not to prosecute the boy.

BAD NIGHT FOR SPIRITS.

With the Slate Racket. Henry Slade, the spiritualistic medium has gotten himself into trouble, and is under bail for a hearing before Alderman Succep, of the Southside, next Thursday, on a charge of obtaining money under false pretense. The prosecutor is Harry Hoover, of the Secular Society, who claims to be one of a party of half a dozen people invited to a seance at 91 River avenue, Allegheny, a few nights ago, where Mr. Slade attempted to give a performance.

Whether it was a bad night for spirits, or whether Mr. Slade was incapable of ducing the spirits, does not appear, but Mr. Hoover was dissatisfied with the attempt being an expert in spiritualistic sleight-on hand. He told Slade that the performance was simply ridiculous, and he demanded his money back. This was refused, and a dispute followed, in which the spirits could not be induced to take Slade's part. The suit resulted and Slade was arrested.
