"Missus, please sit again. A little longer stopping, plenty water coming by-and-by. I was evidently the subject of more super stition, and, knowing what children they were in their fancies, I hope I may be ex-cused when I contess that I lent myself to their superstitions and consented to stay. I was about to drop back into my seat on the step when the old mau produced a thick, atriped estion rug, and spreading it close to the temple he invited me to come under the shelter of its walls. I necepted the invitation, and found the rug a great improve-ment on my other sent. The water had lost its silvery ripples and was like a dull sheet The old man covered my feet with some soft woolen cloth smelling of sandal wood. I noted that he was eager to make me comfortable, so as to insure my presence some time longer. Ramalingum, now thoroughly roused from his alumberous state, watched him with interest as he disappeared into the musty recesses of the temple.

I leaned forward and in at the small door way. The old man was busy lighting more lamps before the idol, and placing others in niches in the dusty walls. He salasmed to the idol several times; and taking a potsherd of live charcoal, he blew up a red spark and sprinkled some powder upon the embers. A beautiful blue smoke curled upward and a powerful smell of burning in-cense filled the sir. It was so pleasant that when he had finished I beekoned to him to bring it to me. He brought a fresh supply of powder, and waved his smoking potsherd round me, as he had waved it round the idol. My clothes and nostrils were satur ated with the fine blue smoke, and I found it a soothing, comforting odor, that counter-acted the somewhat marshy smell that was beginning to rise from the water. When he had thoroughly famigated me, he put his potsherd down and re-entered the building, returning in a few moments with some silver jewelry and some sparkling gens set rudely in gold. I held out my ads for the treasures, but he would not let me touch them. A necklace of green stones, some small head ornaments, bangles and finger rings were slowly displayed be ore my presumably admiring eyes. Perhaps the old man, knowing the sex's weakness for gems, thought that a sight of the temple jewelry, with which the dol was adorned on great occasions, would calm my restlessness and keep me where I was. Slowly he replaced each jewel in its bit of cotton cloth

Then be opened another little parcel and took out a curious figure of an imaginary animal. It was a cross between a dog and a lion in the head, and it had a bull's body. The eyes, which were enormous in proporits size, stood out of its head like frogs' eves, and were formed of different olored stones; one was a dull, dark, rayless amphire of no value at all: the other was a fiery ruby that scintiliated marvelously, con-sidering that I had nothing but the moon-light and the illumination from the open foor by which to examine it.

The old man laid the figure in the paim of my open hand and squatted 1a front of me. He held my fingers after the fashion of a fortune teller, examining the hand, but his eyes were bent upon mine.

'Missus, look at the red eve and see how it sparkles. The Swami is pleased. Now, missue, look well and closely, and the red eve will turn toward the Swami inside the temple.

Some trickery, I thought, These people are adepts at conjuring, and perhaps by some wonderful machinery the little figure moves. Full of curiosity I gazed at it closely, while the old man and Ramalingum, who had edged round to the front alongside of the other, watched me intently, awaiting my expression of wonderment.

As I looked into the sparkling ruby eye, the old man still holding my fingers with gentle touch, my thoughts wandered away nto the past. What ancient sculptor had devised the strange uncouth animal repre-sented here? And what did the red and blue eyes mean? Possibly this little sense-less figure had often been the recipient of at prayer and appplication ruby was getting dull. Surely the sky was darkening, and I looked up quickly. The moon had disappeared and the vapor had grown into thick cloud. I shivered, for there was a strange, nucanny feeling in the air. Ramalingum took the woolen covering from my feet, and, unfolding it, threw it stream. over my shoulders. I glanced down at the image in my hand, It had not changed; and tired of the position, I withdrew my fingers from the old man's grasp, and laid the little idol down on the threshold of the temple. I noted at the time that I placed it immediately upon a figure of the trident engraved on the stone. Ramalingum and his companion smiled taintly, scarcely perceptibly, as] did so. Than the old man got up, and blowing the embers in the potsherd into a bright glow, he sprinkled more powder upon the fire and wafted blue clouds of smoke ril round me. As the smoke cleared away my eyes caught sight of figures moving on the spit of sand opposite the temple. The clouds were passing away, and the moon shone out with a brilliancy more of the second than of the first quarter. Who are those people over there?"] asked Ramalingum. Again the peon and the old man appeared to exchange glances. "They are native people come to worship the river god," was the answer. My lethargy and indolence were gone. I nlso let no further desire to go, nor did I fear that the gathering crowd would dislike my presence there. My mind was filled with an absorbing interest in their proceedings to the exclusion of all other thoughts; and, resting my face on my hands, I watched the white sandy promontory with eagerness. Every moment fresh arrivals augmented the crowd, till there must have been some hundreds. Some of them bore fisming torches of cotton, dipped in oil; others placed cres-nets along the water's edge, and the smoking tongues of flame that rose from the burning were reflected on the rippling stream, the mellow light mingling strangely with the silvery moonbeaus. The crowd was nuder the influence of some strong excite-

He touched her forehead with his fingers, and, leading her by the hand, brought her before the open door, to within two or three yards of where I sat. The lights from the many lamps within shone full upon her face, and showed me one of the most beautiful down to the spot. The stone was perfectly dry. Not a vestige of water-still less blood-was to be seen. 2 When Mrs. Savile came up she said: "I am so sorry we have been such a time. After seeing the sluices we came back to the river bank and sat under a tree, over there." She maidens of India I had ever seen. Her commaidens of India I had ever seen. Her com-plexion was pale olive, her lips were full and of the rich red of the pomegranate. But lovely as her features were, her eyes sur-passed all the rest. They were of a beauti-ful relvety brown, like the rich brown spots on the panther's skin, and, under the influ-"Not s pointed to a large banyan in full view of the temple. Have you been disturbed at all since we left?" asked Mrs. Savie, looking curiously into my face. "I thought I saw people over there, at the water's edge," I replied, unwilling to say Her people's land lies on the river bank, and, if the season is good, money and jewels will be forthcoming to forward the wedding. My heart warmed toward the what I had seen. "They were jackals, probably," said Col-onel Brevis. "They come down to drink, and I remember hearing some howling in girl, and I smiled at her in sympathetic en-couragement. But she did not see me, nor did others, who had waded across the stream after her, appear to notice my presence. After her, appear to notice my presence. Her rapt gaze was fastened on the idol, which she could see through the open door, and she slowly fell on her knees before the image. The old man went into the building, this direction while we were sitting under the tree." "I believe you have been asleep," said Mr. Savile. "The long day and the heat have overcome you." "Where is the old keeper of the temple?"

Then the jewels that I had seen were also as though he did not understand. Colonel Brevis replied to my query: "The old man who has charge of the tem brought, and the idol was adorned with

He led me round to the other side and The buzz of voices from the crowd on the sand died away in breathless attention, and once more I could hear the lapping of the showed me the old villain, rolled in his water against the piers of the big arches. Having adjusted the idol to his satisfac-tion, the temple man directed the girl to place her hands upon its head. I now noblanket, apparently fast asleep. "He goes to bed at dusk and rises with the dawn. Nothing would wake him now, for I believe he eats opium. We might beat him and kick him to a jelly and he would sleep through it all," said the Coloticed for the first time that one of her hands was marked by a mole, precisely similar to mine, except that hers was of jet black, "He cannot be asleep. He was with me only a few minutes ago," I said increduwhile mine was brown. As she touched the stone she looked up in the man's face and lously. Colonel Bevis called the peon. nsked him a question. Something was causing her uneasiness, and her beautiful "Ramalingum, has this old fellow been with you and the lady?" eyes began to wear an anxious look. "What does she say?" I asked Ramalin-

"No, sah'b," was the ready reply. Colonel Brevis smiled. I was so angry at gum "She knows that the Swami is to drink the deliberate lie, and at Colonel Brevis' evident belief in the peon's word before mine, that I turned aside without another syllable. Once more searching the landblood, and she is asking where the blood is to come from." "Where is it?" I repeated, looking round for the usual black goat or gaudy game-towl, that usually loses its head on these oc-Casions. "It is there," replied Ramalingum significantly. I did not see it, but supposed that it was being brought. A narrow gleam of reflected light attracted my attention, and I saw a powerful man come forward out of the little powerini man come forward out of the little group, with a drawn sword in his hand. He held it down as though he did not wish to attract attention, and his eyes were fixed on the old man. At this moment the girl caught sight of a standing a short distance from her. With a seemed to me at all satisfactory. The old temple man, wishing, for reasons of his own, to keep me there, had managed by some art known to himself, to lift the curtain of the couple. They were her parents, and her growing fears culminated when she looked past. Perhaps he burnt some other drug be-side the incense, and so glouded my bodily into their earnest, anxious faces. The scream was evidently not part of the programme, sight, while it sharpened my mental vision, and made me receptive of bygone scenes and it disconcerted the master of ceremo-pies. After a moment's hesitation he which were mirrored on his own brain. Per-haps I pursued the workings of his uncivilappeared with a silver bowl, in which was some liquid. Stirring the mess with eye, the pictured wishes ot his evil, superhis forefinger he gave it to the girl and bade her drink. She looked doubtfully toward her parents, but they signed to her to obey, and she obediently swallowed it. The old soul, he would organize just such an orgie man then took her hands and replaced them on the idol's head, holding them there for the space of a full minute. The girl fixed the space of a full minute. The girl fixed her eyes upon his face, and the beautiful orbs grew dreamy and calm under his gaze, till all fear of resistance to his will faded, leaving her in a trance-like evolution for the space of the space their care. "In a short-time I noticed an improvestitions heart. Of one thing I was certain, that had he no fear of the Sircar, and were ment in my condition. However, I was ever ready to study the native under religious excitement, and look on at his strange, beathenish festivals. was set the mark of Vishnu. As she paused, the crowd bent low before er, some throwing themselves on their knees and touching their heads to the ground; others clasping their hands together and exclaiming, "Swami! Swami!" My old friend, who had stood by the open door of his temple all this time, stepped for-ward and went down to the water's edge. He had lost all the infirmity of his age in the auticipation of his duties, and his limbs seemed supple and rounded with youth once more. I was surprised at the change, and looked hastily at the peon, to see if the same change had been wrought in him. No, there

WELLS ON THE RIVER BANK. Contractor Barris Has Received Contracts to Build a Number of Them. Now that the Lucy furnace well, which a number of leading manufacturers around Pittsburg are going to sink similar ones. The Lucy furnace well has been in opera-tion six weeks, and works more successfully than was anticipated.

Statement From a Well-Known Gentleman of was sunk at the river bank about four months ago, has been pronounced a success.

Hickman, Pa. The statement given below is from one of the patients residing out of the city who was treated from the office of Dra. Copeland & Blair. The gentleman in question is Mr. Will-iam Barnes, of Hickman, Pa., a thriving town on the Pittsbug, Chartlers and Youghlogheny Railroad, about 16 miles out from Pittsburg. During a recent conversation with the writer, he said: "Five years ago my trouble first made its app sarance, and it continued to grow stead-ily worse until I was at last in a very serious condition. My head and nose were first stopped up, and there was a dropping from my head to my throat. I would get up in the morning feeling more tired than when I went to bed the night before. I could eat but little, and what I did eat laid like a heavy load on my stomach. Mr. Samual Harris, contractor, who first planned the river well, said yesterday: There are about six wells to be put down for the various mills in the city. I will sign a contract in a short time with Singer, Nimick & Co. to sink them a well. Had the river been in good shape we would have been at work before If the river is not low we cannot stomach. "At last the trouble extended to my chest. There would be sharp pains stabling like a knife right over my heart. My lungs became affected and I had a dry, hacking cough. I grew weaker and weaker and was unable to do any work. I lost all sense of taste and smell. I was auvised to go to England. I went there, and spent a great deal of money, but derived no benefit. I became disheartened and honest-ly believed my trouble would soon cause my death. "The wells will be about 15 feet in diameter and 28 feet deep, so that we can get the pure spring water. While we sink we are pure spring water. While we sink we are obliged to build a brick casing. We set the brick from the top and then go down. The well that will be sunk at Singer, Nim-ick & Co.'s is to vield 6,000,000 gallons per day. Besides this one, we will sink wells day. Besides this one, we will sink wells at Homestead, Carnegie, Phipps & Co.'s upper and lower Union mills, Miller, Met-calf & Parkin, Bear Creek Oil Refinery, Black Diamond Steel Works and the Car-

"The result has been a great surprise to me. I improved rapidly from the very first. I soon regained my sense of smell and taste. I have no more trouble with my heart or pains in my chest. I can eat well and feel refreshed by my sleep. I can work all day and feel good at night. In fact, i am perfectly well. I owe my recovery to Drs. Copeland & Blair, and shall be glad to speak with anyone about my case."

Some time ago Mr. Harry Phillips, of Hulton, Allegheny county, Pa., commenced a course or home treatment for his entarthal trouble, un-der the care of Drs. Copeland & Blair. At that time his trouble bad assumed a very aggravated form. He stated to the writer as follows: "My nostrils would clog up. My head ached

My nostrils would clog up. My head ached constantly. I had severe pains in my chest. There was a dropping of mucus from my head to my throat. I had night sweats. My heart would palpitate rapidit.and be followed by a slow, irregular beating and feeling of faintness. I was daily growing weaker. The slightest exercice tired me and I was unlift for work."
"How do you feel now?"
"Like another being. All the symptoms I have described to you have disappeared, and I feel as well as I ever did in my life."
Last May Miss Lottle J. Forker, of 239 Arch street, Meadville, Pa., placed hersell under treatment by mail with Drs. Copeland & Blair for her catarrhal trouble.
On June 9 she wrote: "Your medicine is doing me good. I do not feel so tired, and my headehes have cossed."
August 26 her letter stated: "I feel quite like a different woman from the one I was when I commoneed your treatment."
Mr. M. C. Wilson, who commenced using the home treatment early in July, wrote on the 25th of the same month: "I am improving steadily; feel much better than I have for years past."
