HISTORY OF HER ILLNESS. Mrs. Stowe continued in her good health to the summer of 1888. She divided her time each year between her pleasant home in this city, her summer place at Ferry Beach, near Old Orchard Beach. Me., and her winter orange plantation at Mandarin, Fla. In the heat of that season she broke down. In-stead of going to the Maine shore she and her twin daughters sought a farmhouse at Sag Harbor, on Long Island Sound, where

Late in the summer the news was flashed around the world that the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was dying at the farmhouse where she had sought health. But she rallied. She was attended by her son, the Rev. Charles E. Stowe, and Dr. E. B. Hooker, the son of her sister, Mrs. Isabella Beecher Hooker. No one expected that she would ever quit that house alive. She was fixed, however, on coming back to her home on Forest street, in this city, and would not listen to entreaties to remain where she was. The doctors warned her of the dangers of the journey; but to no avail. The longing for the familiar scenes of her home acted as a stimulant, and daily she gained in wrength. At last it was decided to remove the the familiar scenes of her home acted as The doctors warned her of the dangers of her to the city. STRUGGLE WITH THE GREAT DESTROYER. The world had prepared itself for her death, and anxiously watched for a reaction, which seemed certain to follow the excitement of the change. For nearly one year and a half the vitality of this remarkable woman has been in conflict with the great destroyer. Instead of being the subject of an obituary notice, Mrs. Stowe was soon able to take walks with an attendant, and to ge to church on pleasant Sundays. She greated her old neighbors and acquaintances with spirit, and appeared for a time like her former self. Her home is one of the pleasantest in "the hill" section of Hartford. Sur-rounded by graceful trees, the house has an inviting appearance. Large bow windows and a pretty porch add to the beauty of the building in which the authoress is passing her last days. Adjoining in the rear is the quaint house of Mark Twain, while within a stone's throw is the home of Charles Dudley War-mer. Her household is composed of herself, good to stop on at paramore in ensure diffe-tion. A special train of Pullman parlor cars and day coaches will leave Union sta-tion at 8 o'clock A. M. on above dates. These tickets will also be good on regular trains at 8 A. M., 7:15 and 8:10 P. M. Sleepher twin daughters, maiden ladies of 45, two servants, and the nurse in constant attendance upon the failing head of the family. The son, the Rev. Charles E. Stowe, aged about 40, has until a few weeks age been the pastor of the Windsor Avenue Congregational Church, and lived a mile or more from his mother's place. Mrs. Stowe's sister, Isabella Beecher Hooker, of woman suffrage fame, resides on Forest street. The interior of Mrs. Stowe's domicile shows the handiwork of a refined mind. Pet cats are continually in the household, and are greatly beloved by the aged woman. On an easel in the parlor is a life-sized crayon portrait of the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.

REFECT OF HER BROTHER'S DEATH. It was about the time of the death of her brother Henry that she fully realized that her faculties were on the wane. Up to this time she was considered in the height of her mental powers. The fatal illness of her brother, with its hours of anxious watching for the end, wore upon her mind. The writer, in conversation with her a few days before the death of Plymouth's pastor, found her in a state of great unrest and nervous news. She imagined her brother was dead and her friends were keeping it from her. She nervously pleaded to know if the end P. M. had come, and, on being assured that her brother was reported as more comfortable, she became absorbed in her own thoughts, oblivious of any person in her presence.

After the death of Henry Ward she was stricken with sorrow, and maintained the quiet of a recluse for some time. The win-for of 1888-9, tollowing her return from Sag Harbor, was remarkable for its mildness and lack of snow. On pleasant days she Hive, Sixth and Liberty. took walks on the streets in the vicinity of her home, accompanied by her nurse, more as a companion than for any necessity of an attendant. She was able to walk a half mile or more at a time, and showed improve- | self.

25 PER CENT DISCOUNT SALE OVERCOATS AND CLOAKS FOR ANOTHER WEEK.

KAUFMANNS' TO CONTINUE THEIR FAMOUS

THE : POPULAR : WILL : SUPREME

When on Saturday, January 18, we first inaugurated this most successful One-Fourth Off Sale it was our sincere intention to limit it to that one day only. But the public simply took us by storm. Every aisle and inch of available space was crowded with purchasers, and, though we had materially increased our force of salesmen, hundreds of customers had to be turned away without even being waited on. In deference to the wishes of the latter we announced the following day (Sunday, January 19) that we would prolong the time of our Twenty-five Per Cent Off Sale until yesterday. During this additional week we sold an incredibly large number of Overcoats and Cloaks-the amount of the discounts we returned to our customers being nearly $10,000. But the end is not yet! During the last few days we have received a large number of letters, telegrams and personal solicitations, requesting us most urgently to grant another extension. Well, who could refuse under the circumstances? At the eleventh hour we consented.

NOT ONLY SHALL THIS BE THE IRREVOCABLY LAST BUT THE BANNER WEEK OF OUR GLORIOUS 25 PER CENT DISCOUNT SALE.

The fact is that the rush of last week left us with many hundreds of odds and ends and broken sizes of Overcoats and Cloaks. Between the hours of 8 and 10 to-morrow morning we shall divide these garments into assorted lots (putting the Overcoats on special counters and hanging the Cloaks on special racks) reduce the prices that were current last week, and then, on top of this new reduction, commence (at 10 o'clock sharp) to close them out at an additional

DISCOUNT OF 25 PER CENT FROM THE REDUCED FIGURES.

For the special information of contemplating purchasers we give the following brief outline of the manner in which this sale will be conducted:
