parted, the alcalde embraced us, and nearly all the people of Finisterre were out to shout after us heartielt parting goodwill, and "Dios le a compane!" "Dios le a companel" came fervently from every grateful tongue. Circling the noble bay, we passed through the hamlet of Corcuvion, its people also in a sad plight from the mysterious epi demic, crossed the little torrent of Jallas and then with a peasant as guide climbed to a considerable altitude, from which the At-lantic could be plainly seen. Thence descending by a mountain path into the valley of the Tambre, we reached Nova and its single into where we refreshed ourselves soon after noon. Here we procured another guide, a typical Gallegan, from whom, on our way to Santiago de Campostelo, which we reached shortly before midnight, I drew much useful information regarding the people of Galicia, the oldest, and once the most famous province of Spain.

OLD GALICIA REVIEWED.

The old sovereignty of Galicia comprises the present four northwestermost provinces of Spain named Lugo, Coruna, Orense and Ponteveda, with a population of 2,000,000 souls. The inhabitants are descended from the ancient Botians and preserve their fine physique and facial peculiarities to a re-markable degree. The cities and towns are far apart and strikingly interesting in very ancient, though unartistic architecture; but the region, outside the towns, is more densely and tempest-swept moors, than any other portion of Spain. Outside of the cities and the more pretentious hamlets there is no habitation deserving a better name than chozas, and they are perched in all manuer of romantic and out of the way places, usu-ally sheltered and half hidden by luxuriant chestnut groves. In these chozas whether the peasant occupant is a sitiero or tenant at will, at a rental not exceeding three American dollars per year, or whether he has become the proud possessor of a few acres, which is every Gallegan's highest dream, the peasant of Galicia who remains at home idly sits and dozes his life away in sodden indolence. Four bare walls, the outside always whitewashed, the inside black with smoke and fith, and a thatched roof, are the climate. December in Palestine is a enough for shelter. He needs little fire, and the dead branches of the forests prowide for this. A patch for potatoes, a quarter of an acre for mijo or millet, a half ere for borone or corn, are all he sullenly pecks at in the summer; and for winter his perro or dog is the same excellent company as is his wife's rucca or distaff to her. Two or three goats furnish enough milk, and oneso or cheese whose horrible odor no comskinny jacas on whose patient back burdens inconceivable are packed. He knows no spade nor plow nor other toil-provoking implement; and as his choza always stands eside a bubbling spring or song ul rivulet, no labor is ex; ended in his only other need. JUST A HARMLESS ANIMAL.

This Gallegan is a sort of animal, never exactly harmful, never wholly helpful, and always wholly contented with a sombrero, a pair of leather breeches, a shirt worn outside these, a cockade or a tassel, and any red or yellow stuff for a sash. He is not vicious. When he was young he did some labor. But altogether he is only a unit of calculation in summing up population. It he be married he lives peaceully anywhere in the mountains. His wife is prolific of children and rude expedients. He rears children, like goats, because they come. The are welcome to come, to stay or to go. the is likely to know a few airs on the galax, the Spanish highland bagpipe, and he will sing through his nose to this and the moon him of the various places he sees. It was enough for us to find in the ruinous khan enough for us to find in the ruinous khan the could hardly lose his way in the Galician mountains for the lugubrious notes that and to reflect that it occupies in all probreach from one choza to another, as these old bagpipes and older Gallegan lungs bellow and roar against the affrighted air.

Upon the lace of things one feels that all is squalor, poverty and permeated with a rested awhile in His errands of good-will to dumb sort of wretched content. Carlyle said of Emerson, "He has learned the art of sitting still." The Gallegans ever possessed it, pride in it, and send it down through posterity as the one desirable achievement of life. But that they may "sit still" they calmly accept their period of toil unflinchingly. When the Gallegan routh has arrived at the age of 18, he goes to his drudgery, at sea, in the army, or as the

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE DISPATCH, 1 NAZARETH, December 13 .- People who visit Palestine in the spring, when the hillsides and the valleys are green and the trees covered with luxuriant foliage, have deligtful experiences no doubt, but from what I hear and my own thorough enjoyment of my trip, I am strongly of the opinion that now is the best time of the year for the stranger in the Holy Land. As Dr. Talmage puts it: "Nature now has her gloves off." In these clear days of December one gets at things with a single glance. populous, considering its sterile mountains | Hill and valley are clearly defined, and brook and river are seen unobstructed by the leaves of bordering trees. Ruins, fruitful in historic suggestion, stand out in hovel in all Galicia. Their owners call them the bareness which is the aptest ex- versal. pression of their bald antiquity. In the important matter of personal comfort, moreover, it is an immeasurable relief to be spared the terments inflicted in the warmer season of the year by fleas, flies and other creatures, insectile and of the larger kind. These, as many a much-persecuted traveler might attest, make life almost intolerable in the hot months.

> A LUXURIOUS WINTER CLIMATE. We happily escape their inflictions, and at the same time have a positive pleasure in luxury. The sun shines just warm enough to be agreeable, and the wind is only cool enough to be refreshing and bracing. The trip we made from Jerusalem to the Jordan was as pleasant in realization as a fairy tale is in contemplation. We left Jerusalem by the Jaffa gate, our horses pawing the ground impatiently as eager to begin the journey. Leaving the Visitation of the

There is no certainty that the peaks pointed out to us under these names are the exact ones on which respectively Moses "viewed the landscape o'er" and ended his mortal life, but the probability is that Pisgah is rightly identified, because on a clear day all Palestine is visible to the naked eye from its summit. Then we bathed our hands and faces in its waters, which as soon as the moisture dried off, we found covered with a white, salty incrustation. The air on its shores was pure and refreshing, and we should have liked to loiter longer by it. Dr. Talmage tried a mouthful of the water of the sea, which he found to be exceedingly disagreeable to the taste. The so-called apples of Sodom we found by actual experiment are not filled with ashes, as says a Sunday school fable, but with seeds. We collected many beautiful pebbles before we left this interesting place, from a variety of every conceivable shape and color, which brightens up the beach and renders it a great temptation to stay long. This we were not able to do, for Dr. Talmage was impatient of longer delay, his work of making notes for his "Life of Christ," keeping him constantly busy, and we were soon again in the saddle, our beautiful Arabian horses leaving rapidly behind them what the Brooklyn divine graphically describes

Our new friends proved themselves to be men of considerable attainments, well acquainted with the country through which we were traveling and thoroughly well up in its Biblical asso-ciations. Their entertaining conversation added much to the interest of the trip. After awhile one of them, who is a resident of Manhattan, Kan., inquired of Dr. Talmage whether he would consent to baptize him by immersion in the river Jordan. The desired consent was given, and 3 P. M. appointed as the time for the ceremony, which was sol-Delightful Travel on Arabian Horses, With emnly performed.

At the close of the ceremony Dr. Talmage said:

A GROTESQUE BEDOUIN DANCE.

The 50 Redoning who visited us here were about equally divided as to sex. They kept entirely separate during the strange per-formance they gave. First the men appeared. Standing in a row, the light of the flickering flames illuminating their features with an uncertain glimmer, they awaited a signal from their leader, who was the sheak of the village, to begin the dance. Receiving it they set to work as one man, singing, screeching, yelling, jumping and accompanying these exercises with contortions and gyrations of every conceivable and inconceivable sort, brandishing swords and an-tiquated pistols. Their antics were exciting but harmless. As they knew but one tune, and that tune set, as it seemed to me, to but two places in the scale, its frequent repetition soon made the performance monoto-nous. So we called a halt, and asked that the women performers take their turn. Our wish was obeyed, but did not described, is the old ristated Rand.

The statement given below is from one of the patients residing out of the city who was treated from the office of Drs. Copeland & Blair. The gentleman in question is Mr. William Barnes, of Hickman, Pa., a thriving town on the Pittsbug, Chartiers and Youghiogheny Bailroad, about 15 miles out from Pittsburg.

During a recent conversation with the writer, he said: "Five years ago my trouble first made its appearance, and it continued to grow steadily worse until I was at last in a very serious condition.
