the man's more timorous, superstitious TO ENTER NINE SUITS And absolutely, as though they heard them not, they were indifferent to the vicar's murmured regrets and fears.

"Poor fools, poor fools! What sorrows for themselves are they heaping on their heads! What wanton disregard for the philosophy that teaches all things are possible." To have asked him to tie the nuptial knot would have been vain, so, as had been previously arranged, the Clareford family re-turned to the tiny West Kensington house, and Hugo took up his quarters in a London hotel till the necessary preliminaries should be arranged for the marriage. A month from the day on which they had paid their visit to the vicarage by the Weir, they were man and wife, and whatever that dread curse would bring to them of evil, they must henceforth suffer conjointly. Still, Annie had no fear; while, as for

Hugo, though there were moments when he "unspotted from the world," prevented him from wholly abandoning himself to the depths of despair.

On the fiery Colonel, too, her faith had also told, though he could not wholly disembarrass himself of dread.

It was a crisp October day when they started for the Riviera on their honeymoon trip, announcing they would be at the ab-bey by Christmas, when they hoped to entertain their friends and relations.
Till then Annie would tain have forgotten that the abbey and its curse existed.

If she could only chase all memory of them both from her beloved Hugo's mind, how much happier would she be! But he could not rid himself of the feeling that, tempted by his strong love, he had al-lowed Annie to sacrifice herselt, and, even as the moth flies round and round the lighted candle, to dare the flame. He watched her with such intense anxiety that it became quite painful to her, though she tried to laugh at him, and asked him, What is it you are afraid of, Hugo? You seem to fancy you already see me lying dead at your feet. I assure you I feel quite well and—to use a thoroughly mundane phrase—very jolly." "Oh, Annie, love, do not jest on such a serious subject. I have had a letter from the vicar to-day, still regretting, for your sweet make, that I have been so daving.

'Tell me, Hugo; the vicar has the reputation of being a learned man, an absolute bookworm. Has much learning made him mad, or how can he give way to such super-stitious nonsense? How can a curse that some angry men have chosen to pronounce hundreds of years ago have any effect on us "And yet it is so. If you were to read, as I have, some of the folios in the vicar's possession, you would see it followed out see how these curses have been fulfilled; not only in one case, but in many, have they overtaken the inmates of this accursed abbey, even down to this generation."

"These are coincidences, I should imagine.
Does the vicar attempt to account for them?"

"Nay, my Annie, it you wish to go in for what the vicar calls the philosophy of this natter you must argue it out with him."
"But surely you can tell me what he pre-

Well, the vicar has investigated and investigated till he has brought himself to be-lieve in spiritual agencies. The theory is that those who uttered the curse have be come lost souls, demons, in fact, and that having power to work mischief they are relentless. They suffer horribly for their want of forgiveness and charity. They are, in fact, in hell, but from thence they can torment us poor human beings-even as good spirits can and do assist us." Annie's eyes opened very wide. Such philosophy was beyond her comprehension, and of the agency of an Unseen World, save of the Omnipotent Power of God the Father, she k ew paught, and in very truth she had to perplex her mind with such unad abstruse problems.

"Let us no the work that is set before us to do without counting the cost," she said, after a minute or two, during which she had apparently been thinking hard, "and leave demoniacal agencies to fight out the battle "Then you believe that good is more nowerful than evil?" "Most assuredly I do."

Still, for all Annie could say, Hugo lay under the ban of the curse.

Life was very bright by the Riviera, but the sunshine only seemed to mock his tears, and each succeeding day, though it dawned rich in the gifts of prosperity. Hugo grew thinner and thinner, from the suffering produced by the dread of an impending doom.

"The curse on the abbey had never failed;" so old lore, represented by the vicar, had taught him. Why should he and as the contract with them would show.

his race be exempt? As possessor of these old church domains, he was not to be smitten save through those he loved; and he did love Annie very dearly -so dearly that his love for her was a positive fear and pain.

Nevertheless, to all outward appearance the young newly married couple were dismore and more anxious, and never opened his eyes after an hour or two of disturbed agitated sleep without suffering from the haunting dread that some terrible calamity would happen before nightfall.
"Could the curse be developing in a new form, and was madness to be his doom?" he Annie laughed at the supposition, and her persistent fearlesaness still helped to give Christmas was approaching, and with it the time when they had promised their re-lations they would be ready to receive them at the abbey. To Hugo the idea of going home brought no pleasure, beautiful though the abbey and its surroundings were. Since he had known of the curse that was one of the heirlooms, he regarded the place in the light of a doomed dungeon, and told Annie would only be too glad if he never saw it

She would not, however, let him off the work he ought to do as owner of this large Every preparation was made for the de-parture, when, the English post having just arrived, Annie came into the room where Hugo was with an open letter in her hand.
"Your wish is fulfilled, Hugo. You can never go back to the abbey."

"Ah! How so?"
"It has been totally destroyed by fire, This letter from my father, who was sent for, announces it, and bids me break it to you gently. But Hugo never for a moment deplored the destruction of the beautiful old abbey— he shouted aloud and absolutely capered for Fire, pestilence or water," he cried. "Fire has done its work; let us be thankful, Annie, and feel free."

And Annie was thankful, not that the abbey was destroyed, but that Hugo believed an asset of Herdie's be set aside, the price that the curse had been fulfilled. She herthat the curse had been fulfilled. She her-selt had no more belief in the power of a curse than she had had from the first, but she was far too wise a woman to treat him

Farmers to a chapter on coincidences.

Needless to say, the abbey was never rebuilt, and the ground was let to agriculturists, who gloried in the prolific qualities of Huge Burnet and his wife took a modorn house in one of the home counties, to which no tradition was attached, and where children were born to them and they prospered and were happy.

Annie persistently held to her motto, and instilled it with much practice into her sons and daughters: "Do the work that is set he- Zwegel, against the Braddock Wire Comdo without counting the cost."fore you do with London Society.

Insurance Corporations to Fight the People's Gas Company.

AFTERMATH OF BIJOU EXPLOSION.

Edward Abbott Quickly Convicted of Voluntary Manslaughter.

WIFE'S AFFECTIONS WORTH $2,000

Nine important lawsuits growing out of the natural gas explosion at the Bijon Theater nearly two years ago were on the was depressed beyond words to explain, yet ber trusting confidence in the good that must await them if they kept themselves attorneys not being quite ready they were attorneys not being quite ready they were postponed.

The action is on the part of the Fidelity Title and Trust Company at the instance of nine insurance companies against the Peo-ple's Natural Gas Company to recover losses by fire. It will be remembered that an explosion of natural gas occurred at the Patterson block, on Sixth street, in May, 1888. The Fidelity Title and Trust Company were the trustees for the Patterson beirs, and as such insured the property. After the explosion, the Fidelity Company recovered damages from the insurance com-panies who insured the building. The insurance companies are now trying to recover from the People's Gas Company. The insurance companies concerned in the suit are as follows:

The German Insurance Company of Pitteburg, Hartford Fire Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn.; the Penn Fire Insurance Company of Pennsylvania, Liverpool, London and Globe Insurance Company. The Insurance Company of North America, the Guardian Assurance Company of London, the German-Americae Insurance Company, of New York, and the Continental Insurance Company, of New York.

The arise with a little of the Company, of New York.

The nine suits will be tried in a lump, and the outcome will be eagerly watched by natural gas and insurance men all over the country. The insurance companies want to recover the amounts they paid to the Fidelity Company from the People's Company. The latter company, it is claimed by the plaintiffs, was the cause of the loss.

The first question in the bill is, is it right for the insurance companies to have themselves substituted in place of the injured parties, and to recover damages by subro-gation? The defense is, first, that these par-ticulars do not contain the usual provision for substitution or subrogation, which is now customarily included in fire insurance policies; secondly, a claim on the part of the gas company that said losses were fully paid to the Fidelity Title and Trust Company, and that the insurance companies cannot recover for this reason, otherwise they would be held liable by two parties for the same loss. It is claimed that the insurance policies do not include any such agreement as implied, and the plaintiffs will have to prove that the explosion was caused by the negligence of the People's Company.

The Fidelity Company recovered from the insurance companies after the case had been fully ventilated in the courts. It went to the Supreme Court, which held that where a policy of fire insurance did not contain a substitution clause the companies would have to pay the insured before they could demand a substitution.

The cases will be argued, when they are called up, by Messrs. George Shiras III. and W. L. Miller for the gas company, and Messrs. Van Voorhis and Rodgers for the insurance companies.

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT.

Roly Smith and the Pittsburg Gas Company

Lock Horns. The case of Roland H. Smith vs. the Pittsburg Gas Company for infringement on certain patents, was argued before Judge Acheson in the United States Court yesterday. The suit is for the alleged infringement on two patents on the process of converting natural gas into illuminating gas. The plaintiff was represented by Hon. George Harding, of Philadelphia, and D. F. Patterson, Esq., of this city. The defendants' counsel are W. Bakewell & Son. Mr. Patterson opened the argument, and claimed that Mr. Smith was the first man to claimed that Air. Smith was the first man to patent the process, and has patents covering his claims. The old process first eliminated from the gas certain impurities before sub-mitting it to heat. The new process takes he gas from the earth, and without eliminating anything accomplishes the desired end by submitting it directly to the heat. Mr. Patterson then went into an exhaustive argument on the question of the manufact-ure of gas in its different forms.

Mr. Bakewell contended that the Pitta-burg Gas Company had in use the Granger apparatus, which was in use before Mr. Smith's patent was ever known, and was formerly used to make water gas. Mr. Bake-well cited a number of patents to show that the apparatus now in use by the Pittsburg Gas Company is not an infringement on the Smith process, but that the latter was a direct infringement on other processes.
