GEORGE KENNAN'S FIRST LECTURE

Enjoyed Greatly by One of the Largest Audiences of the Season.

FIRST TALK BY CHAPLAIN MILBURN

As a gentleman, one of the audience, went down the stairs of Old City Hall about 10 o'clock last night, he remarked that he was interested in the result of the local elections, but not sufficiently to lose a chance of hearing a great lecturer now before the public, George Kennan. A great many seemed to share this opinion of the famous Russian traveler, who has been thrilling audiences throughout the country with his pictures of life in the wild wastes of Siberia. After a 1ew preliminary remarks of introduction by Erasmus Wilson, Mr. Kennan stepped forward and launched into the discourse with all the confidence of perfect knowledge of his subject, which for the occasion was "Camp Life in Eastern Siberia." It treated of his experience as one Telegraph Company in 1879 to locate a teleraphic line through Asiatic Siberia to the tussian capital.

From the moment that Mr. Kennan's party touches the coast of Kamschatka his hearers become enthralled by his wonderful description of people, scenery and incidents on the way, He tells of the strange interest and awe the party experienced when they first laid eyes on the curious looking people of that almost unknown country, and the astonishing jargon which the people believe to have derived its source from the tower of Babel, and the difficulty experienced in trying to learn it. EATING WAS UPPERMOST.

How he secured the services of a native to teach him the equivalent of "I want something to eat," as the most likely to be useful in the future, and how that equivalent consisted of such a wonderful mixture of consonants and cracked wowels that he arrived at the belief that he would never be able to get anything to eat if he had to wait to learn the Russian for it.

After an amusing digression describing his efforts to learn the language, Mr. Kennan describes the grand climate and scenery of the Peninsula of Kamschatku through which they traveled in the first stages of the journey to the northward. It was likened to that of Califormia in its perfection, and the surprise traveler who expects nothing but cold and biting winds of a desert land. But as they advance the weather grows colder and colder until the party are forced to retreat on October 1, before the severity of the approaching winter storm, in which they were lost and almost frozen to death. For a time they laid up at one of the native villages, and then collecting 300 dors, forming 10 teams, for another start with the assistance of the Korraks, the most powerful of Siberian tribes, whom he describes as great wanderers, at the same time the most simple and honest of people. Securing their services on the gift of a tew beads. but cold and biting winds of a desert land,

The first meeting of his party with these people and their customs elicits a wonderful series of illustrations. Their victuals, their religion, of illustrations. Their victuals, their religion, their marriage ceremonies all come in for their share, and in such a way does the lecturer depict them all that his audience is swayed from autonishment to sympathy and then to laughter, and all in such quick succession that oncannot help imagining for the instant that they and Mr. Kennan are with him in the lands he sneaks of

THEY ARE HOVEST PROPER

In leaving them the lecturer pays a glowing tribute to their honesty and trustworthiness. He had often slept for weeks 200 miles from the extreme Russian outposts without a thought of fear, although they were as wild and barbarous in their manner as the Indian. Eleven days after starting the second time they had reached the vast, level steppes of Siberia, with their wild, unfrequented wastes, containing not a blade of grass, a twig or sign of vegetation is no difficulty attached to this, so long as one can get hot tea, plenty of fat food, and a good fire to sit around, but one cannot go to sleep, as that would be aimost certain death. On De-cember 24 they reached a lonely village outpost, cember 28 they reached a lonely village outpost, which so filled them with gratitude that they made an American flag out of a pair of red flannel drawers, a shirt, and eked out the required bine with their feelings.

Here Mr. Kenoan digresses again into an interesting and entertaining description of the excitement their arrival caused the natives and the kind valuous accorded them. The unique the kind welcome accorded them. The unique "Korrak ball or dance" is described with remarkable vigor, the lecturer even singing two Russian dancing songs with such dramatic skill that his audience burst into thunders of FINDING FELLOW TRAVELERS. of the discourse Mr. Kennan held his audience fairly spell-bound. He told how the party drove on and on into the dark, dreary wastes of the North, with the surroundings becoming even colder and colder; where no fuel could be found, when to stop meant death, and the doe's feet cracked open with cold and marked the snowy levels with a track of blood; how Mr. Dodd lay down upon his sledge to dle, and in hopes of revivng him a stop had been ordered for the purpose of burning one of the sledges to cook some tea and bring him back to life just us the snow hut of the lost travelers was found. Another digression and Mr. Kennan reaches the crowning point of the Mr. Kennan reaches the crowning point of the lecture, the description of the aurora borealis, which was without doubt one of the finest pieces of description ever heard in Pittsburg. When he had concluded the thusders of applause broke forth in a tunuit until the lecture: was compelled to pause until his audience subsided to finish the lecture.

Mr. Kennan will lecture again to-night, when an immers audience is expected to be present.

an immense audience is expected to be present as his subject, "Russian Siberian Exiles," is considered his best, as it is also the one which has created so much feeling in Bussian politi-cal circles at the present time. It will be illus-trated by stereopticon views of exiles, prisons, scenes, etc. The opportunity of hearing the most finished lecturer on the platform to-day, dealing with his favorite theme, should not be

THE BLIND CHAPLAIN'S LECTURE.

Dr. Milborn Delighted a Small Crowd at the of the Lite of Auron Burr-The Lecturer's Odd Appearance.

Dr. W. H. Milburn, the blind chaplain of the House of Representatives, lectured last evening in the Second Presbyterian Church. The subject o his lecture was "Aaron Burr, the Most Romantic Character in American Political History."

Dr. Milburn is well-known to Pittsburgers. The last time he was here he delivered a series of lectures which were highly enter-taining and successful. He is pleasant and ovial, and says there is more fun in him than in a hal dozen people who can see, al. 1186. though he facetiously adds that the fun ot be seen in his eyes. He has been Chaplain of the House for a long time, hav-

Chaplain of the House for a long time, having been first chosen 44 years ago when he had but attained his majority. In speaking of the proposed institution for the blind in this city, he said he hoped Dr. Campbell would come to Pittsiurg and devote his attention toward building the proposed school.

On account of it being election might the andience was not as large as could be expected to hear the learned speaker. Those that were resont, however, enjoyed a treat. A lecturer endowed with more than ordinary intelligence, with a kind face surroounted with a noble brow beginning to show the wrinkles of age; a long, white beard, but with the light of intelligence shut out from his eyes, he presented an odd while beard, but with the light of intelligence shut out from his eyes, he presented an odd appearance. He makes all the gestures of a trined actor, pitches his voice to a high key when he comes to an exciting climax, and shows by the tremor of his notes that he sees his andiagrams.

the said:

"His life was a study for political historians, and he died in 1836 obscured, dishonored, unhappy and alone. When he was but four years of age his parents died, and he was sent to school by an uncle. One day he had a quarrel with his teacher, and, to show the obstinacy of this child's nature, which afterward characterized him as a man instead of crying, as other children do, he hurried off to the woods and stayed there until he was brought back by sheer force. When 9 years of age he ran away to sea. As he was waiting for the vessel to leave the pier he spied his uncle coming down the dock. With the agility of a cat he ran up to the top of a mast and refused to come down. At the height of about 100 feet he dictated terms which his uncle had to agree to before the lad would come down from his high perch. To win his uncle's consent he

"At the age of 18 years Burr started to go to Princeton Collega, where he graduated with the highest honors of his Alma Mater. He was once tempted to gamble, and, although he never had a billiard one in his hand, he tried and won. As he went home with the winnings in his pocket, he haid them on his study table, and looking at the money with his classical, rigid features, he resolved never to gamble again, and he never did. This was one of the many things that characterized his determination.

his services as a recruit. He distinguished him-self as a soldier and was promoted. He showed his ability to command men at Valley Forge. In the army was a camp whose members were throwing the other soldiers into a spirit of rest-lessness by their insubordination. Major Burr determined to break it up. He subjected the men to a rigid discipline. He found that there was a conspiracy to take his life, and he took steps to punish the offenders.

CUT OFF HIS HAND. drawn up in line, with the moon shining full in their fades, and, with sword in hand, he passed down the line, looking in a supercilious way at every man. In the middle of the line was a man six feet tail, who was the ringleader in the company. Major Burr stopped and, as he did so, the man raised his musket to his shoulder. With a movement as quick as a flash, Major Burr raised his sword and almost severed the man's hand from the wrist with one blow.

"During the war he acquitted himself creditably. In the four years he won for himself the plaudits of the nation. He applied himself afresh to the study of law. He was admitted to practice in 1783, and afterward removed to New York. He soon had few rivals and only one superior. The latter was Aiexander Hamilton. He was what is commonly called a practical lawyer and a singularly successful man. He was marked with all the aris known to the profession. He prepared his cases, and it is hinted, prepared his witnesses as well. They were at his mercy and he wound about honest men such a complication of intrigues that they could not extricate themselves from the meshes. Men who went on the witness stand to tell a straight story, he would make contradict, themselves until he held them up to the ridicale and scorn of the jurors. I should not mention this as it is a relic of the past, and I am assured that no reputable American lawyer ever does this now. "No sooner had the Federal Constitution been dent. He also teld of Burr's disappointment at being defeated at the Gubernatorial election in New York. He told in graphic language the story of the duel between Burr and Hamilton and the latter's death.

ST. LOUIS AND ITS GROWTH New Residential Neighborhoods Growing at a Bemarkable Rate, Notably Tyler and Dundee Pince. A Dispatch correspondent returned a short time ago from a visit to St. Louis, and THE PITTSBURG DISPATCH is full of praise concerning the push and energy displayed by the people of that great city. It is not surprising that capitalists and investors from all parts of the United States are directing their attention toward that city. Its wonderful and steady growth, commercial and manufacturing in-terests and advantageous location all combine to impress the mind of every thinking person with conjectures of a marvelous iuture. Being one of the great railroad centers, connecting with all parts of the continent, the volume of its business became so great that the construction of what is known as the new Merchant's bridge was a necessity. With all the vast Southern and Western territory open to its commerce the possibilities of still greater development are unlimited. The business men of the city are noted for their pluck and energy in taking hold of any enterprise which is of benefit to the people, and the high standing reached by the city in the commercial many things that characterized his determination.

"In the winter of 1773 he began to study for the ministry, and took for his motto 'the road to besven is open for us all., In the profession of faith he disposed of the question as coolly as he had disposed of all questions in college. Never again in all the scenes of his checkered career dul he permit the question of Christ's right to the fealty of his soul to be canvassed in his ears. He went to Connecticut and began to study law. He paid particular attention to the question of the constitutional right of the mother country to put a tax on articles without representation. He thought he saw the right of the colonies to resist. When the call to arms came he hastened and offered his services as a recruit. He distinguished himself as a soldier and was promoted. He showed his ability to command men at Valley Forge. In world imbued the investor with a feeling of security. This confidence in the methods of unimproved property. A mild, healthful climate, beautiful parks and boulevards, alt fine churches and educational institutions, some of great fame, alike make it a most desirable place to live in. It is a well-known fact that real estate in St. Louis today is cheaper than in any other city of the Union, and it is also conceded that the "He had all the ball cartridges taken out of their muskets and, on a bitter coid night, he ordered them out for inspection. He had them drawn up is line, with the moon shining full in their faces, and, with sword in hand, he passed in property at the present time, and in the right leadlife it sures to hain its arrange. right locality, it is sure to bring its owner a handsome profit within a reasonable time. There has been a growing tendency in the last three years to build up the western portion of the city. New business houses are also rapidly locating west of Eighth street. Some of the finest office buildings to be found anywhere in the United States have been built on Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Ninth and Olive streets in the last three years, being rented long before completion. It is surpris-ing to note the number of new firms among the occupants of these magnificent structures, which is the most conclusive evidence of the increase in all lines of business. The preference for building lots in the western and southwestern portion has been most de-cided in the last years. With numerous cable and electric roads in operation and the Scott Elevated Railroad well under way. the vexed question of rapid transit is at las settled. The construction of the new Citizen's cable road, which will be in operation by is a relic of the past, and I am assured that no reputable American lawyer ever does this now. "No sooner had the Federal Constitution been adopted than he became an anti-Federalist, as the opponents of Washington were then called. Of all men in the United States whom he detested, he hated none of them more than General Washington and Alexander Hamilton. In 1791 he was chosen as Senator for six years. The anni-Federalists had a majority in the Senate. They gave the President to understand that they would reject any candidate not suitable to them for the mission to France. With his usual courtesy of manner, the President saked them to name a man. Three times the Senate nominated Aaron Burr, and three times did George Washington reject the nomination on account of Burr': moral character."

Dr. Milburn then gave a description of the troublesome times when Thomas Jefferson was elected President and Aaron Burr Vice President. He also told of Burr's disappointment to be a stand should be a sta March 1, has opened up the choicest regiand A. T. Scott and placed on the market.
